THURSDAY, JUNE 30, 1932

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Rev. Joseph R. Sizoo, D. D., pastor of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, shelter of a mighty rock within a wearied land, within whose love there is room for every perplexed mind and burdened heart, grant us Thy peace this day; deliver us from the tyranny of shifting moods and wavering feelings. May the joy of the Lord be in our hearts and the beauty of the Lord in our lives this day. Grant unto each one the strength that is needed for the burden of the day and the courage for the decisions that must be made and the willingness to endure sacrifice and misunderstanding. This we ask through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

PROTECTION OF COPYRIGHTS AND PATENTS OF FOREIGN EXHIBITORS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4912) to protect the copyrights and patents of foreign exhibitors at A Century of Progress (Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration), to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933, which had been reported from the Committee on Patents with amendments, in section 1, page 1, line 5, after the words "of the," to strike out "Registrar" and insert "Register"; on page 2, line 2, after the words "to the," to strike out "Registrar" and insert "Register"; on the same page, in line 6, after the word "any," to strike out "certificate of" and insert "foreign"; in line 7, after the word "copyright," to strike out "registration" and insert "or any"; in line 10, after the word "any," to strike out "copyright"; and in line 14, after the words "to the," to strike out "Registrar" and insert "Register," so as to make the section read:

That the Librarian of Congress and the Commissioner of Patents are hereby authorized and directed to establish branch offices under the direction of the Register of Copyrights and the Commissioner of Patents, respectively, in suitable quarters on the grounds of the exposition to be held at Chicago, Ill., under the direction of A Century of Progress, an Illinois corporation, said quarters to be furnished free of charge by said corporation, said offices to be established at such time as may, upon 60 days' advance notice, in writing, to the Register of Copyrights and the Commissioner of Patents, respectively, be requested by said A Century of Progress but not earlier than January 1, 1933, and to be maintained until the close to the general public of said exposition; and the proprietor of any foreign copyright or any certificate of trade-mark registration, or letters patent of invention, design, or utility model issued by any foreign government protecting any trade-mark, apparatus, device, machine, process, method, composition of matter, design, or manufactured article imported for exhibition and exhibited at said exposition may upon presentation of proof of such proprietorship, satisfactory to the Register of Copyrights or the Commissioner of Patents, as the case may be, obtain without charge and without prior examination as to novelty, a certificate from such branch office, which shall be prima facie evidence in the Federal courts of such proprietorship, the novelty of the subject matter covered by any such certificate to be determined by a Federal court in case an action or suit is brought based thereon; and said branch offices shall keep registers of all such certificates issued by them, which shall be open to public inspection.

At the close of said A Century of Progress Exposition the register of certificates of the copyright registrations aforesaid shall be deposited in the Copyright Office in the Library of Congress at Washington, D. The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 5, line 8, after the word "act," to insert a comma and the words "but no notice of copyright on the work shall be required for protection hereunder," so as to make the section read:

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LICENSE FEES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, just ahead of the bill which we have just passed is Order of Business 928, being House bill 11638, which was laid aside under the objection of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], who now advises me that he has no objection to its consideration. It is a bill which the District authorities are very anxious to have passed before adjournment. It has already passed the House of Representatives and has been carefully considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia. I am glad to say that it is a very meritorious measure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. For what does the measure provide?

Mr. CAPPER. It provides for a revision of the license schedule of the District of Columbia. They are now operating upon a schedule that was established in 1902—30 years ago. Obviously that schedule is now out of date. For more than a year the District authorities, the District Commissioners, the superintendent of licenses, and the corporation counsel's office have been working in the preparation of this revised schedule.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the bill, if enacted, increase the revenues of the District of Columbia?

Mr. CAPPER. It will increase the revenues of the District of Columbia—

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. By what amount?

Mr. CAPPER. By very nearly $100,000, and, so far as we know, no one is objecting to the passage of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is the report of the committee unanimous on the bill?

Mr. CAPPER. It is.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I recall that the bill was considered on another occasion. I have no objection to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kansas how much it will increase, in a general way, the fees now being charged?

Mr. CAPPER. The total will be raised to about $215,000, which is an increase of nearly $100,000. The bill aims only to cover the actual cost of maintaining the various inspection and examination services.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 4920) to authorize the closing of a portion of Virginia Avenue SE., in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

STANDARD WEIGHTS AND MEASURES IN THE DISTRICT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 461) to amend section 18 of the act entitled "An act to establish standard weights and measures for the District of Columbia; to define the duties of the superintendent of weights, measures, and markets of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1921, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "by," to strike out "changing the period at the end of said section 18 to a colon and adding thereto the following: 'Provided, however, That ice cream, sherbets, water ices, and similar frozen foods may be sold in 2½-gallon measures of 577.5 cubic inches'" and insert "adding thereto a subsection to be known as section 18a, to read as follows:

"Sec. 18a. That the standard measure for ice cream, sherbet, and similar frozen food products shall be of the following capacities: One-half pint, pint, quart, half gallon, gallon, 2 gallons, 2½ gallons, and multiples of the gallon; and no person shall use in determining the quantity of ice cream kept for sale, offered for sale, or sold in the District of Columbia any measure of other than the foregoing capacities," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 18 of the act entitled "An act to establish standard weights and measures for the District of Columbia; to define the duties of the superintendent of weights, measures, and markets of the District of Columbia; and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1921, be, and the same hereby is, amended by adding thereto a subsection to be known as section 18a to read as follows:

"Sec. 18a. That the standard measure for ice cream, sherbet, and similar frozen food products shall be of the following capacities: One-half pint, pint, quart, half gallon, gallon, 2 gallons, 2½ gallons, and multiples of the gallon; and no person shall use in determining the quantity of ice cream kept for sale, offered for sale, or sold in the District of Columbia any measure of other than the foregoing capacities."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

JOHN H. DAY

The bill (S. 4049) for the relief of John H. Day was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John H. Day, Decatur, Ala., the sum of $650. Such sum represents compensation for excess mileage of approximately 12,500 miles which the said John H. Day was required to travel while carrying the mails on star route No. 24352, Decatur, Ala., by Albany, to Moulton, Ala., during the years 1925, 1926, and 1927, on account of the grading and paving of the regular route between Decatur and Moulton.

Mr. BLACK subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senate passed a few moments ago Order of Business 966, being Senate bill 4049 for the relief of John H. Day. I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the bill was passed may be reconsidered for the purpose of substituting for the Senate bill a House bill which is in identically the same form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama, that the votes whereby Senate bill 4049 was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed may be reconsidered? The Chair hears none, and the votes are reconsidered.

Mr. BLACK. I move that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8398) for the relief of John H. Day and that the bill be substituted for Senate bill 4049 and be considered at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Committee on Claims is discharged from the further consideration of the House bill, and the House bill will be now considered.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8398) for the relief of John H. Day, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 4049 will be indefinitely postponed.

NELSON E. FRISSELL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2161) for the relief of Nelson E. Frissell, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,500," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Nelson E. Frissell, of East Templeton, Mass., the sum of $3,500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States. Such sum represents the money expended, the value of services performed, and the damages sustained by Nelson E. Frissell in connection with a contract with the Post Office Department for the construction and lease of a post-office building at Augusta, Me., which contract was canceled by the Post Office Department: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

KENNETH G. GOULD

The bill (H. R. 4885) for the relief of Kenneth G. Gould was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $186.17 to Kenneth G. Gould, lieutenant in the Medical Corps Reserve, as reimbursement for cost of shipment of personal property.

WILLIAM H. HOLMES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 465) for the relief of William H. Holmes, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, after line 7, to strike out "amounts of $3,607.07 and $243.04, which amounts he expended during the period from September, 1921, to April, 1926 (symbols 11348 and 11006), such sums now standing as disallowances in said accounts on the books of the General Accounting Office" and insert "amount of $3,607.07, said sum representing payments made to guardians or other representatives authorized to receive same on behalf of beneficiaries of the Veterans' Bureau," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed, in the settlement of the accounts of William H. Holmes, former disbursing clerk, United States Veterans' Bureau (now Veterans' Administration), Washington, D. C., to allow credit in the amount of $3,607.07, said sum representing payments made to guardians or other representatives authorized to receive same on behalf of beneficiaries of the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. BRATTON. May we have an explanation of that measure?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the bill was introduced at the request of the Director of the Veterans' Administration. It covers payments made to guardians of incompetent ex-service men after they have been technically relieved of their guardianship. The Comptroller General, although he has disallowed these items in the disbursing officer's account, recommends that the bill be passed in this amount, on the ground that in most cases the service men actually got the benefit of these disbursements and that there was no negligence on the part of the disbursing officer. He has tried to check up and make sure that every time a check went out it went to a guardian who was still in office, but in some cases it was impossible for him to get the notice in time to stop the check.

Mr. BRATTON. It applies to cases where there has been a change in the guardian.

Mr. REED. Where there has been a change in the guardianship or the guardian has been dismissed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN N. NOLAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3414) for the relief of Ellen N. Nolan, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,500," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ellen N. Nolan the sum of $1,500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States as compensation for the injuries sustained by being knocked down and injured by an automobile owned and operated by the Post Office Department: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of $150 shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of $150 on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

LELA B. SMITH

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3811) for the relief of Lela B. Smith, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 13, after the numerals "$1,000," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent Lela B. Smith from receiving a pension.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, that is an unusual provision. I wish some Senator familiar with it would explain it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senate will bear with me for a moment, I think the proviso put in by the Claims Committee on page 2 is unnecessary. Subsequent action granting Mrs. Smith a pension could be taken by Congress without any permission expressed in this measure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is my impression, and I am wondering what the object of inserting such a provision may be.

Mr. REED. I see no purpose in it. The giving of six months' pay to the widow of a reserve officer who was killed on active duty is quite customary, and I hope the Senate will agree to that; but I share the view of the Senator from Arkansas as to the proviso.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask that the amendment be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED subsequently said: Mr. President, some time ago the Senate passed House bill 3811, for the relief of a lady who is the widow of an Air Corps officer who had been killed. On my motion, I think, and perhaps that of the Senator from Arkansas, we struck out the proviso at the bottom of page 2, being an amendment proposed by the committee.

I am now told that that lady is at present receiving a pension, and that unless the proviso remains in the bill it would have the effect of cutting off the pension that she is now receiving. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that we may return to that bill and reconsider the vote by which it was passed for the purpose of agreeing to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed will be reconsidered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that there is a question in my mind whether the result would be as stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania. There is nothing in the language of the bill to indicate that this is in lieu of pension; but if the question arises in the mind of the Senator from Pennsylvania I have no objection to the request.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Arkansas if the words beginning in line 11, "in full settlement of all claims against the Government," would bar this lady from receiving a pension?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I should not think so. A claim against the Government is a very different thing from a pension; but I say that if the question arises in the mind of the Senator from Pennsylvania I will not interpose any objection to the request.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, this is a bill reported by my committee. Do I understand that an amendment has been offered by the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President. We simply returned to the bill in order to adopt the amendment recommended by the Senator's committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is desired to pass the bill just as the committee recommended it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment of the committee was rejected will be reconsidered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SAME GIACALONE AND SAME INGRANDE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3604) for the relief of Same Giacalone and Same Ingrande, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on page 1, line 10, after the word "to," to strike out "Imp, together with the sum of $240 for loss of the use of said boat Cornell while same was being repaired," and insert "Imp," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Same Giacalone and Same Ingrande, of San Diego, Calif., in full settlement of all claims and demands against the Government, the sum of $459.55, the actual cost of repairing the damage caused to the vessel Cornell, owned by said Same Giacalone and Same Ingrande, by the United States Coast Guard boat Imp: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CATTERINA POLLINO

The bill (S. 1738) for the relief of Catterina Pollino was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Catterina Pollino the sum of $500, representing the amount deposited by her on account of an immigration bond executed by the Aetna Casualty Co., of San Francisco, Calif., conditioned upon her leaving the United States within six months after admission as a tourist, and subsequently forfeited, although said Catterina Pollino departed from the United States within the period fixed in the said bond as extended by the immigration authorities.

R. L. WILSON

The bill (H. R. 756) for the relief of R. L. Wilson was considered by the Senate, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to R. L. Wilson, of Anthony, Kans., the sum of $500. Such sum represents the amount paid into the Treasury of the United States pursuant to a plea of guilty for violation of certain provisions of sections 32 and 37 of the Criminal Code; whereas other individuals indicted with R. L. Wilson, and who performed the same acts and who pleaded not guilty, were acquitted under an instructed verdict, for the reason the court held that the evidence did not disclose any violation of the law.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I think that measure should be explained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator reporting the bill is not present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think it may be disposed of very quickly. The report states:

In view of the fact that this man had pleaded guilty and paid his $500 fine for a violation of a law which was afterwards declared not a violation by the Federal court, your committee is of the opinion that the relief asked for in this bill should be granted.

Since the fine was collected on a conviction that was afterwards held unlawful, it seems to me fair that the claimant should be reimbursed.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, quite often where persons are indicted jointly, one pleads guilty and the others are acquitted; and in those cases the fine is not repaid. I do not see any justification for this measure, at least in the absence of a further explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator ask that it go over?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold his objection just a moment, I think the statement of the Attorney General covers the matter pretty fully. He says:

Claimant in this bill, R. L. Wilson, was one of a number of persons indicted in Kansas on the charge of impersonating Federal officers. These men were employed by the Kansas Wheat Growers' Association to ascertain the amount of wheat grown by the farmers in order to determine whether contracts between the members and the association had been violated. The indictment charged them with impersonating Federal officers under the Department of Agriculture in securing this information. Wilson entered a plea of guilty and was fined $500, which sum he paid. Others of the group indicted on the same charge entered pleas of not guilty, and at the trial of the case the court directed a verdict of acquittal on the ground that defendants had secured nothing of value and that, therefore, their action did not constitute an offense under the statute.

It seems unjust to require claimant to suffer this penalty in view of a later decision, by a court of competent jurisdiction, holding that the same action by his codefendants did not constitute an offense under the statute, and I would, therefore, recommend favorable consideration of the measure.

Mr. BRATTON. If the man pleaded guilty under the belief that what he did constituted a violation of the law, and later, upon a trial, a court of competent jurisdiction held that those acts did not trench upon the statute, I think he is entitled to be repaid; and I withdraw the objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRY W. WARD, DECEASED

The bill (H. R. 3812) for the relief of the estate of Harry W. Ward, deceased, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75.41 to the estate of Harry W. Ward, deceased, of Redwood Falls, Minn., for actual financial loss sustained by Harry W. Ward, without negligence on his part, through refund already made to the Post Office Department, wherein postal funds for which he was responsible as postmaster at Redwood Falls, Minn., were on deposit in the First National Bank at Redwood Falls, Minn., which said bank failed under date of July 21, 1925, and was liquidated, none of said sum being repaid from the assets of said bank.

LIZZIE PITTMAN

The bill (S. 4327) for the relief of Lizzie Pittman was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD CO.

There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $468.82, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay said claim.

KARIM JOSEPH MERY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2863) for the relief of Karim Joseph Mery, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$5,000 as compensation for" and insert "$3,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government on account of," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Karim Joseph Mery, of San Antonio, Tex., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government on account of the death of his son, Joseph Karim Mery, a minor, who was killed at San Antonio, Tex., on July 10, 1923, by the negligent driving of a United States Army truck.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VETERINARY CORPS OF THE REGULAR ARMY

The bill (S. 2774) to amend an act to increase the efficiency of the Veterinary Corps of the Regular Army, approved June 28, 1930, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of promotion, longevity pay, and retirement there shall be credited to officers of the Veterinary Corps, and former officers of the Veterinary Corps now on the retired list, all full-time service rendered by them as veterinarians in the Quartermaster Department, Cavalry, or Field Artillery.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to increase the efficiency of the Veterinary Corps of the Regular Army."

FIRST CAMDEN NATIONAL BANK & TRUST CO.

The bill (S. 2349) for the relief of the First Camden National Bank & Trust Co., of Camden, N. J., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the necessity for this measure?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was reported by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], who is absent. The bill was introduced by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN].

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, this is a case where the First Camden National Bank & Trust Co. was examined by revenue officials of the Government, who omitted to give the bank credit for tax-exempt bonds which it held. The result of the examination was certified by the Government agent, who asked the bank to sign a closing agreement, which was done. When the bank officials looked over their accounts they found that the Government had omitted to give them credit for these tax-exempt bonds, on which a tax of some $11,000 had been levied. As this is a perfectly just claim, and the department acknowledges that it is a just claim, I think the bill ought to pass.

Mr. BRATTON. Does the department lack authority to adjust it under existing law?

Mr. KEAN. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the report of the Treasury Department on this bill is adverse. It is very difficult to see how an exception could be made in this case without making it in a large number of income-tax cases.

Mr. KEAN. In this particular case it was the fault of the Government agent in not giving the bank credit.

Mr. GEORGE. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RELIEF OF RESIDENTS OF BALTIMORE AND HARFORD COUNTIES, MD.

The resolution (S. Res. 250) referring the bill (S. 4415) for the relief of certain persons formerly having interests in Baltimore and Harford Counties, Md., to the Court of Claims for findings of fact was considered by the Senate and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 4415) entitled "A bill for the relief of certain persons formerly having interests in Baltimore and Harford Counties, Md.," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and the representations of the Government made in connection therewith and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

TISHENG YEN

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 179) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, Tisheng Yen, a citizen of China, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit Tisheng Yen to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that Tisheng Yen shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the courses in the various departments of instruction, and that said Tisheng Yen shall not be admitted to the academy until he shall have passed the mental and physical examinations prescribed for candidates from the United States, and that he shall be immediately withdrawn if deficient in studies or in conduct and so recommended by the academic board: Provided further, That in the case of said Tisheng Yen the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

HARRY H. HORTON

The bill (S. 4068) to authorize the award of a decoration for distinguished service to Harry H. Horton, formerly private, first class, Medical Detachment, One hundred and forty-eighth Field Artillery, American Expeditionary Forces, in the World War, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to cause the recommendation for the award of a decoration to Harry H. Horton, formerly private, first class, Medical Detachment, One hundred and forty-eighth Field Artillery, American Expeditionary Forces, for distinguished conduct in the vicinity of Malancourt, near Montfaucon, France, on or about October 12, 1918, to be considered by the proper boards or authorities, and such award made to said Horton as his said conduct merits.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think it is only right, when this bill is being passed, that some statement should be made to explain why this special action is taken in this case.

This man was terribly wounded in the fighting in the Argonne. The whole lower part of his face was shot away. Ordinarily his action at that time would have been reported by his commanding officer, and he would have been decorated for the distinguished conduct on that occasion. He crawled for about 2 miles with this horrible wound to get help for the other members of his outfit. He did not know what afterwards proved to be the fact, that every one of them had been killed by the shell that tore away his face. In the effort to get help for them he crawled this distance under fire. The only reason why he was not decorated at the time was that his commanding officer similarly was knocked out. There was nobody to recommend him, in other words.

Those special reasons seemed so persuasive to the committee that it recommended this special bill.

RESTORATION OF STATUS OF WARRANT OFFICERS, REGULAR ARMY

The bill (S. 4597) to restore to their former retired status in the Regular Army of the United States persons who resigned such status to accept the benefits of the act of May 24, 1928 (45 Stat. 735), and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to his former status as a retired warrant officer or a retired enlisted man of the Regular Army of the United States with all pay, privileges, and emoluments pertaining thereto, any former emergency officer now on the emergency officers' retired list created by the act of May 24, 1928 (45 Stat. 735), who resigned his retired status in the Regular Army in order to obtain the benefits of that act: Provided, That such former emergency officer shall make application in writing to the Secretary of War not later than June 30, 1933, for such restoration: Provided further, That restorations to the retired list of the Army under this act shall be effective as of July 1, 1933, and that no pay, privileges, or emoluments pertaining to the retired grade of the Regular Army to which such persons are restored shall accrue prior to the effective date of such restoration: And provided further, That after such restoration all persons so restored shall continue to be entitled, under the act of May 24, 1928 (45 Stat. 735), to those rights and privileges only to which they would have been entitled if they had not resigned from the retired lists of the Regular Army.

OTTO CHRISTIAN

The bill (S. 2283) for the relief of Otto Christian was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to summon Otto Christian, late captain, Medical Corps, of the Regular Army of the United States, before a retiring board for the purpose of a hearing of his case and to inquire into all facts touching upon the nature of his disabilities, to determine and report the disabilities which in its judgment have produced his incapacity and whether such disabilities were incurred during his active service in the Army and were in line of duty; that if the findings of such board are in the affirmative the President is further authorized, in his discretion, to nominate and appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the said Otto Christian a captain in the Medical Corps and to place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for the officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That the said Otto Christian shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowance by the passage of this act.

LEONARD THEODORE BOICE

The bill (S. 1860) for the relief of Leonard Theodore Boice was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Leonard Theodore Boice, who was a second lieutenant of Infantry, National Army, and was formerly attached to Headquarters Company, Three hundred and sixth Ammunition Train, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a second lieutenant of Infantry on the 10th day of August, 1918.

LOUISE BECKE

The resolution (S. Res. 249) to pay to Louise Becke a sum equal to six months' compensation of the late Edward Becke was considered by the Senate and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, fiscal year 1931, to Louise Becke, widow of Edward Becke, late a private of the police force for the Senate Office Building under the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

REVISION OF CANAL ZONE LAWS

The bill (H. R. 7518) to amend an act entitled "An act extending certain privileges of canal employees to other officials on the Canal Zone and authorizing the President to make rules and regulations affecting health, sanitation, quarantine, taxation, public roads, self-propelled vehicles, and police powers on the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, including provision as to certain fees, money orders, and interest deposits," approved August 21, 1916, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, there are 25 bills on the calendar relating to the Panama Canal Zone. I think it advisable to have a statement from the chairman of the committee relative to those bills generally. I reserve the right to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as proposed to be amended.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, the bills on the calendar with reference to the Panama Canal Zone were prepared in response to authority vested in the President by way of an act passed in May, 1928, to have all of the laws now in force in the Canal Zone revised and codified and, when such revision and codification was completed, to report the same to Congress for its approval. They have the approval of the Secretary of War and of the Governor of the Canal Zone, as the report on file shows. They were thoroughly gone over by the House, Mr. LEA, of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, submitting them for the committee.

In view of the pressure of work in the Senate and long hours since the bills were referred to the Inter-oceanic Canals Committee, it has been impossible to hold hearings. Consequently, each member of the committee was furnished with copies of all the bills, together with the House reports; and after considerable time and reflection all the Senators except the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] have signed the committee reports.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SCHALL. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I ask whether the Senate committee considered this bill?

Mr. SCHALL. Yes. They were read. The committee was polled; and, as I said before, each member of the committee was furnished with copies of the bills and the House reports. It was impossible, under the strain that we have been, to get the committee together; but I am sure, from the time taken by each Member to read the bills and look over the reports, that they have had due consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Were all these bills reported on a poll by the committee?

Mr. SCHALL. All but one—H. R. 7522, which Senator HEBERT, after passing the others, desired to withhold for submission of an amendment, which bill has not been put on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. This bill amends the Code of Criminal Procedure for the Canal Zone. It is a volume containing 62 pages. It relates to subjects of very great importance, and I do not see how the Senator can expect the Senate to pass a bill of this importance and volume on a mere poll of a committee, which we all know is not applicable to a bill of this character.

Mr. SCHALL. They were thoroughly considered in the Committee of the House, and I am sure that each individual member of the committee gave these bills due and earnest consideration. The able lawyer and distinguished senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] had a personal interview with members of the House committee, and was thoroughly satisfied and signed the reports.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly, Mr. President, if the Senator takes the position that when a House committee considers a bill and approves it there is no occasion for the consideration of it by a Senate committee, that statement is important.

Mr. SCHALL. The War Department is very anxious to get this code revised. It is nearly an adoption of the California Code.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That does not give the Senate any information about what the bill contains. What important amendment to existing law does the bill make?

Mr. President, I move that the bill be recommitted.

Mr. BRATTON. Let the bill go over.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I was going to suggest that not only is this 62-page codification of the criminal law of the Canal Zone on the calendar but Calendar No. 1029 is a bill of some 573 pages, which is a complete recodification of the civil law of the Canal Zone.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And repeals the code now in force relating to civil procedure.

Mr. REED. It repeals all the present law, and that long bill, the revision of the Civil Code, is reported to us without a single word of comment from the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals. I do not believe, Mr. President, that any committee of the Senate excepting the Committee on the Judiciary is competent to pass upon so comprehensive and sweeping a change in the civil and criminal law of any part of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is unthinkable to me that the Senate would pass this bill when it is stated that it was reported without consideration by the committee, a mere poll being taken in order to secure its report.

Mr. REED. And no report being filed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that there is a report.

Mr. SCHALL. The report is in the file.

Mr. REED. It has been omitted from my file.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico has asked that the bill go over, but the Senator from Arkansas had before that moved that the bill be recommitted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, according to the report, this bill contains a large number of amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I think the Senator has the wrong bill. The bill under consideration is House bill 7518, Calendar No. 991.

Mr. SCHALL. There are three bills which carry amendments, H. R. 7518, 7519, and 7520.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The bill relating to the Code of Criminal Procedure contains perhaps 100 or more amendments. That is in the same category as the bill to which the Senator from Pennsylvania referred.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President—

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SCHALL. If Senators will take the trouble to look over the written report on these bills, I am sure they will be entirely satisfied as were the members of the House and Senate committees.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, the bills will have to go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico requested that the pending bill go over.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I join with the Senator from Arkansas in the belief that the several bills referred to should be recommitted, and in view of his motion to that effect, I withdraw my request that the pending bill go over.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. I think it is due the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals to suggest that it is a sort of an orphan committee. It seldom has an opportunity to function. During this very strenuous session of the Congress it has been utterly impossible for the chairman of the committee to obtain a quorum. Therefore the bills which have been reported through polling the membership of the committee have not been heard by the committee. The committee is not advised respecting the merits or demerits of the bills, and I doubt very much whether any member of the committee has had the time and opportunity to read the bills. For that reason I did not join in reporting them. I felt that it was a mistake. They are not so urgent that they must be passed now, and if all these bills were to go over, it would give the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals or some other committee, perhaps the Judiciary Committee, an opportunity to consider the bills. Many of these bills can very properly and very efficiently be handled by the proper committees. The bills relating to the codification of the criminal law and the codification of the civil law of the Canal Zone perhaps could best be handled by the Committee on the Judiciary; and I say that without any reflection upon this orphan to which I have referred. The Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals is not equipped, either with clerical help or otherwise, to give consideration to these very important bills respecting the codification of the criminal and civil laws of the Canal Zone. I feel, however, that if all the bills are recommitted to the committee, perhaps during the summer and before the Congress reconvenes there may be an opportunity to go over the bills carefully, and have them reported with full information at the next session of the Congress.

I thought I ought to make this statement in behalf of the committee. I may say that there are 25 bills on the calendar relating to the Canal Zone. They all have the same status, and there has been a hearing before the committee on none of them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, does the Senator suggest that they go back to the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals, or be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. BLAINE. I would not want to ask that they go to the Committee on the Judiciary without the suggestion coming from the chairman of the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals, and I think only those bills relating to the codification of the criminal laws and civil law of the Canal Zone should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The bill immediately under consideration is Calendar No. 991, which would give the President the power to make rules and regulations in matters of sanitation, health, and so forth.

Mr. BLAINE. That should go back to the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I believe it should go back to that committee, and I move that it be recommitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals.

PENAL CODE OF THE CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7519) to amend the Penal Code of the Canal Zone was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Minnesota, in view of the fact that this bill involves only legal questions and is a comprehensive measure dealing with the Criminal Code of the Canal Zone, whether he thinks the bill should go to his own committee or to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. SCHALL. It probably should have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, Mr. President, and I have no objection to it being so referred. But I am sure that it has had ample consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest that that bill and the next bill on the calendar, House bill 7520, to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure for the Canal Zone, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the two bills mentioned, House bill 7519 and House bill 7520, will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Also Calendar No. 1029, House bill 7521, to provide a new Code of Civil Procedure for the Canal Zone and to repeal the existing Code of Civil Procedure, a very voluminous bill. It contains several hundred pages.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I thought the Senator from Minnesota asked that all the bills go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator said he would not object to that course.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The other bills are mostly of a different character, and I do not know that there is any objection to the consideration of them, at least some of them. I see no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the next bill on the calendar.

OSCAR R. HAHNEL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5561) for the relief of Oscar R. Hahnel, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOE ANDREWS CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 650) for the relief of Joe Andrews Co., which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE M. PEED

The bill (H. R. 2927) for the relief of George M. Peed was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, this bill passed the House only about a week ago. I am informed that on yesterday the beneficiary named in the bill passed away. I do not know whether the funds would go to the widow or the estate, or what disposition should be made of them under the laws of Virginia, and for that reason I ask that the bill may be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

VIOLA WRIGHT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3536) for the relief of Viola Wright, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY MURNANE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5998) for the relief of Mary Murnane, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHASE E. MULINEX

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1230) for the relief of Chase E. Mulinex, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "Postmaster General" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Chase E. Mulinex, postmaster at Tolley, N. PROHIBITION OF GAMBLING IN CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7498) to amend Act No. 4 of the Isthmian Canal Commission, entitled "An act to prohibit gambling in the Canal Zone, Isthmus of Panama, and to provide for the punishment of violations thereof, and for other purposes," enacted August 22, 1904, was considered.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, there is no objection to this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not think there is any objection to it.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Act No. 4 of the Isthmian Canal Commission, enacted August 22, 1904, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Every person who conducts and carries on, or causes to be conducted or carried on, either as owner, agent, or employee, whether for gain or a chance for gain by deducting a percentage either of the profits or of the stake being hazarded, any game of faro, monte, roulette, lansquenet, rouge-et-noir, rondo, tan, fan-tan, studhorse poker, poker, seven-and-a-half, twenty-one, hokey-pokey, or any other game, for money, checks, credit, or other representative of value; and

"Every person, who has in his possession or under his control, either as owner, agent, employee, or otherwise, or who permits to be placed, maintained, or kept in any room, space, inclosure, or building owned, leased, or occupied by him, or under his management or control, any slot or card machine, contrivance, appliance, or mechanical device, upon the result of action of which money or other valuable thing is staked or hazarded, and which is operated or played by placing or depositing therein any coins, checks, slugs, or other articles or device, or in any other manner and by means whereof, or as a result of the operation of which, any merchandise, money, representative or articles of value, checks, or tokens, redeemable in, or exchangeable for, money or any other things of value; and

"Every person who has in his possession or under his control, or who permits to be placed, maintained, or kept in any room, space, or inclosure or building owned, leased, or occupied by him, or under his control or management, any device or game on which any money or other valuable thing is staked or hazarded, and as a result said money or valuable thing may be won or lost;

"Shall upon conviction be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment in jail not exceeding one year, or both such fine and imprisonment."

SUPPRESSION OF LOTTERIES IN CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7499) to amend Act No. 3 of the Isthmian Canal Commission relating to the suppression of lotteries in the Canal Zone, enacted August 22, 1904, was considered.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I can see no objection to the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Nor can I.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he thinks section 6 of the bill is wise? It reads:

The governor may issue a permit for conducting a raffle or gift enterprise whenever it shall appear to him after proper investigation that the gross proceeds of said enterprise are to be used for charitable purposes.

Should the United States Government countenance such a thing?

Mr. BLAINE. I think we are legislating now with respect to a people with whom we have very little acquaintance. What may be done in the United States is one thing, but what it is necessary to permit to be done to have friendliness in the Canal Zone is quite another thing. It is not a breach of the moral code of the people of Panama and I think is entirely compatible with the standards which prevail in the Tropics.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator state just what changes in the law the bill provides?

Mr. BLAINE. I can not advise the Senator for the reasons I stated a few moments ago. The bill has not been considered by the committee in open hearings and it was not reported by the full committee. I did not join in the report.

Mr. BINGHAM. I notice the report states that the changes proposed in existing legislation are explained in the report of the House committee No. 511. We do not have that report before us.

Mr. BLAINE. I stated to the Senate a few moments ago, though perhaps the Senator from Connecticut was not in the Chamber then, that the committee has not held any hearings on the bill.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, Calendar No. 1009 (H. R. 7498), which passed a moment ago without objection, in substance is a prohibition against the operation of any character of slot machine. That is really what it is. Of course, in our own country we permit people to operate slot machines. Probably within a stone's throw of the Capitol we would find more or less of them. Do we want to be quite so drastic in dealing with people in the Canal Zone?

Mr. BLAINE. The bill to which the Senator from Pennsylvania directed attention is Calendar No. 1010. The bill to which the Senator from Florida directs attention deals with hokey-pokey games.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On objection, Calendar No. 1010, H. R. 7499, will be passed over.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Wisconsin permit this bill also to go to the Judiciary Committee with similar bills?

Mr. BLAINE. I hope the bill will not be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been passed over. The clerk will state the next order of business on the calendar.

PROHIBITION OF BULL FIGHTS, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 7500) to amend an Executive order promulgated August 4, 1911, prohibiting promotion of fights between bulls, dogs, or cocks, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the Executive order of August 4, 1911, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. Any person who sets on foot, instigates, promotes, or carries on any fights between cocks or other birds, or any dog fight, or bull fight, or fight between other animals; or who does any act as assistant, umpire, or principal in furtherance of any fight between any such animals, shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $50, or by imprisonment in jail not to exceed 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court."

PREVENTION OF FIRE-HUNTING, ETC., IN CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7501) to prevent, in the Canal Zone, fire-hunting at night and hunting by means of a spring or trap, and to repeal the Executive orders of September 8, 1909, and January 27, 1914, was considered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, what are the Executive orders repealed by this act?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I can only state what I have heretofore stated. My understanding is that the rules and regulations were heretofore promulgated by the President of the United States. This is to substitute standard law for Executive orders, whatever the orders may be, in relation to the particular subject legislated on in the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every person who shall hunt at night, between the hours of sunset and sunrise, with the aid or use of a lantern, torch, bonfire, or other artificial light, or who shall hunt by the use of a gun or other firearm intended to be discharged by any animal or bird, by means of a spring or trap, or other similar mechanical device, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

The penalties imposed by this act shall be in addition to the punishments authorized by the law against carrying arms without a permit.

SEC. 2. That the Executive order of September 8, 1909, amending section 454 of the Penal Code of the Canal Zone, and the Executive order of January 27, 1914, No. 1884, be, and they are hereby, repealed.

REGULATION OF FIREARMS IN CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7502) to regulate the carrying and keeping of arms in the Canal Zone, was considered.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I think the bill might as well be passed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no objection.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does the Senator think the prohibition of carrying firearms is constitutional?

Mr. BLAINE. I think it is constitutional as applied to the Canal Zone. The Canal Zone was obtained by treaty. I am not familiar with the terms of the treaty, but as I understand the Executive orders heretofore promulgated contain similar regulations. If they were valid, the law would be valid.

Mr. REED. I think it is not valid. I am not going to raise the question.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for anyone to carry on or about his person any firearm or any dirk, dagger, or other knife, or other weapon, manufactured or sold for the purpose of offense or defense, or any slung shot, air gun, sword cane, blackjack, or any knuckles made of metal or other hard substance.

SEC. 2. That the preceding section shall not apply to a person engaged in the military or naval service of the United States, or as a peace officer or officer authorized to execute judicial process of the United States or the Canal Zone, or in carrying mail or in the collection or custody of funds of the United States or the Canal Zone, while such officers or persons are engaged in the performance of their respective duties; nor to a member of a gun or pistol club organized for the promotion of target practice, a certified copy of the constitution and by-laws of which have been approved by the Governor of the Panama Canal and filed with the chief of the police and fire division, when such member is going to or from a target range or is engaged in practice at the target range. A certificate of membership in the gun or pistol club shall be issued by the organization and approved by the chief of police and fire division, which shall entitle the holder to carry firearms as is provided in this section.

Neither shall the preceding section apply to any person authorized to have or carry arms by permit granted under the terms of this act.

SEC. 3. That the Governor of the Panama Canal may authorize the granting of permits to have and carry arms, as follows:

1. To hunt upon the public lands of the Canal Zone or upon lands occupied by private persons, when authorized by the latter.

2. To have arms in residences, offices, business places, and plantations and to watchmen or overseers of plantations, factories, warehouses, docks, or piers. Applications for such permits shall be made to the Governor of the Panama Canal, and shall contain the full name, residence, and occupation of the applicant; and if the applicant is a minor it shall not be granted without the consent of his parent or guardian; but no permit shall be granted to a minor under 15 years of age.

3. To carry arms in private aircraft for hunting or protection of crew or cargo.

SEC. 4. That when an application is granted by the governor for a permit to hunt, he shall indorse his approval thereon and file the application, and he shall cause a permit to be issued to the applicant, upon his payment of a fee of $1.

Hunting permits issued by virtue of this act will allow the holder thereof to have, carry, and use firearms in the area or areas prescribed by the Governor of the Panama Canal, and on the conditions imposed by him under such general or special rules and regulations as he may issue from time to time. And the governor is hereby empowered to designate the area or areas of the Canal Zone in which hunting is permitted, and the class of arms that may be used in hunting in such areas; and no hunting shall be allowed outside of the areas so designated by him. And the Governor of the Panama Canal may, in such general or special rules and regulations, impose such other conditions in respect to hunting as he may deem necessary in the interests of public order and to prevent injury to persons or property.

A permit granted under this section shall run for the fiscal year in which it is issued, and it may be revoked at any time for cause by the Governor of the Panama Canal.

SEC. 5. That permits heretofore issued by authority of law, to have and use firearms, shall not be affected by this act, but such permits shall continue in force until the expiration of the period for which they were issued.

SEC. 6. That anyone not authorized by this act, who carries on or about his person any of the prohibited arms mentioned in section 1 of this act, or who hunts or engages in hunting without first obtaining the permit provided for in this act, or who after obtaining such permit engages in hunting in violation of the provisions of this act or any rule or regulation established by the governor hereunder, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 7. That penalties for the infringement of this act shall be in addition to such punishment as may be imposed upon the offending person for any other offense that he may have committed in connection with the carrying or using of arms in violation of this act.

SEC. 8. That sections 449 to 460 of the Penal Code of the Canal Zone, and the executive orders of December 1, 1909, November 3, 1911, November 7, 1913, and March 6, 1920, and all other laws in conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

BILL RECOMMITTED

The bill (H. R. 7503) to repeal the Executive order of November 23, 1909, making the enticing of laborers from the Isthmian Canal Commission or the Panama Railroad a misdemeanor was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I suggest that the bill be recommitted.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals.

EXTRADITION OF FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE, CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7504) to provide for the extradition of fugitives from the justice of the Republic of Panama who seek refuge in the Canal Zone was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, that is rather a standard law on the question of fugitives from justice. I see no objection to it.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who have been condemned, prosecuted, or accused before the courts of the Republic of Panama as authors or accomplices of crimes, transgressions, or offenses against the laws of said Republic, who seek refuge in the Canal Zone, shall be, upon apprehension, taken into custody by the authorities of the Canal Zone and delivered to the authorities of the Republic of Panama, upon the demand of the Government of that Republic and compliance with the procedure hereinafter prescribed.

SEC. 2. The government of the Canal Zone is at liberty to decline compliance with a demand of the Government of the Republic of Panama for the arrest and delivery to the authorities of said Republic of a fugitive from the justice of the Republic of Panama when said fugitive is a citizen of the United States. The discretion hereby reserved shall be exercised by the Governor of the Panama Canal.

SEC. 3. If the person whose arrest and delivery is demanded should be accused of, or under sentence for, any crime, transgression, or offense committed in the Canal Zone, he shall not be delivered to the authorities of the Republic of Panama until he has been acquitted, pardoned, or undergone his sentence pursuant to the provisions of the laws of the Canal Zone.

SEC. 4. If, in the course of the proceedings in the courts of the Republic of Panama, in the case to which the arrest and delivery appertain, it should appear that probable cause exists for believing the delinquent guilty of another and graver offense against the laws of the Republic of Panama than that which gave rise to the request for his apprehension and delivery, the Government of that Republic may prosecute said fugitive for such other offense after notice to that effect to the government of the Canal Zone.

SEC. 5. The demand for the arrest and delivery of a fugitive from the justice of the Republic of Panama, pursuant to the terms of this act, will be complied with when made in writing and signed by the Secretary of Foreign Relations of the Republic of Panama, or by his direction, and presented to the Governor of the Panama Canal. If the demand is for a condemned and fugitive criminal, it must be accompanied by a duly certified copy of sentence pronounced by a court of competent jurisdiction, and, as far as possible, a description of the fugitive sought to be reclaimed.

SEC. 6. In case of urgency, where there are reasonable grounds for fearing that the fugitive may avoid apprehension, his detention may be asked for by telegraph. The arrest and detention shall be accomplished in the manner and by the officials prescribed by the laws of the Canal Zone, and detentions authorized by this act shall not continue longer than 15 days, during which the procedure for securing the delivery of said fugitive to the authorities of the Republic of Panama shall be completed.

SEC. 7. For the purpose of accomplishing the delivery of the fugitives apprehended and delivered in pursuance of this act the Republic of Panama may send its agent or agents duly authorized to receive said fugitive into the territory of the Canal Zone, but said agent's action and authority shall be limited to receiving such fugitive at the point of departure for return to the Republic of Panama and, at the moment of departure and thenceforth, to exercising the necessary vigilance and restraint to prevent the escape of the person in custody.

SEC. 8. It is hereby made the duty of the authorities of the Canal Zone on the line of transit to provide the person or persons charged with the conveyance of such fugitives so delivered with all the means necessary to prevent escape and to remove all unlawful obstacles that may hinder or delay the return of such fugitives to the territory of the Republic of Panama.

SEC. 9. All papers and other objects found in the possession of the fugitive at the time of his detention that refer to the crime, transgression, or offense of which the fugitive is accused or convicted shall be delivered to the Government of the Republic of Panama. These papers and objects must be restored after the conclusion of the case if there are third parties who assert a right to or over them. The authorities of the government of the Canal Zone may provisionally retain said objects and papers so long as they are required for use as evidence in some other case pending or contemplated in the courts of the Canal Zone, whether such case be related or not to the case wherein the demand for the apprehension and return of the fugitive originated.

SEC. 10. The expense of capture, detention, and transportation of a fugitive from the justice of the Republic of Panama, shall be paid by that Republic; but such expenses shall not include compensation for the services of the judiciary, military, or police authorities of the government of the Canal Zone.

PROTECTION OF BIRDS IN CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7505) to provide for the protection of birds and their nests in the Canal Zone was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Panama Canal is hereby empowered and directed to make and publish suitable regulations, from time to time, for the protection of birds and their nests within the Canal Zone, and to prescribe the form and manner in which birds may be hunted therein and the kinds of birds that may be hunted and that shall not be molested.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person to hunt, trap, capture, wilfully disturb, or kill any bird of any kind whatever, or to take the eggs of any bird, within the Canal Zone, except in the form and manner permitted by the regulations provided for by this act.

SEC. 3. That a violation of any of the regulations established under this act shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment in jail for not more than 30 days for each offense.

BILL RECOMMENDED

The bill (H. R. 7506) to repeal an ordinance enacted by the Isthmian Canal Commission August 5, 1911, and approved by the Secretary of War August 22, 1911, establishing market regulations for the Canal Zone, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I am not familiar at all with this bill. I rather assume that it is all right. It repeals an old ordinance that was enacted by the Isthmian Canal Commission, but I am not certain that there is any authority substituted in the place thereof. It may be well to have the bill recommitted to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals.

REGULATION OF RADIO EQUIPMENT ON OCEAN-GOING VESSELS, CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7507) to regulate radio equipment on ocean-going vessels using the ports of the Canal Zone was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I think there ought to be some consideration given to this bill. The Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals has not had a hearing, as I have suggested, and I do not know in what respect it may contravene some existing law of the United States respecting radio.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the bill is rather simple. It forbids any ocean-going vessel carrying 50 or more persons, including passengers and crew, to leave any port of the Canal Zone unless equipped with efficient apparatus for radio communication, and so forth. Then there is a further provision that the requirement shall not apply to vessels merely transiting the canal or to vessels plying between Canal Zone ports and ports less than 200 miles therefrom. Then there is a provision imposing a fine of $5,000 for a violation. I believe that it is a good bill and I think it ought to pass.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I invite the attention of the Senator from Arkansas that we are legislating for foreign commerce? We are legislating for vessels that do not fly our flag. We are saying, for instance, to the Republic of Chile that it may have an ocean-going steamer that goes through the canal on the way to New York, and if it does not conform with what we think it ought to have in the way of radio we shall fine that vessel $5,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; but if we impose similar obligations and safety devices on our own vessels we can not well exempt other vessels.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, may I suggest that the Panama Canal, as everyone knows, forms a bottle neck at either end of the canal, and it is very important that some provision be made so that radiograms may be sent to the canal and from the canal respecting the approach of vessels at either end of the canal. As I understand, that is largely the purpose of the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. REED. The bill contains a provision that it does not apply to vessels merely passing through the canal in transit. The Senator from Connecticut will notice that on the last line of page 1.

Mr. BLAINE. Those are very small vessels that are referred to there.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania interpret that provision at the bottom of page 1 and the top of page 2 as exempting from the provisions of the bill steamers of foreign nations that are going through the canal in transit? If so, the idea expressed by the Senator from Wisconsin is not sustained.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; that is also intended to exempt the small ships that ply between the Central American ports and which pass through the canal.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes. There may be something in the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that this provision may violate some treaty. I suggest that the bill be referred back to the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Pennsylvania is right in the statement that a vessel merely passing through the canal is not subject to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. If that is so, it would not infringe any treaty and would not be subject to the objection I raised.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think it is a good bill and ought to be passed.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well; let us pass it.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any ocean-going vessel carrying 50 or more persons, including passengers and crew, to leave or attempt to leave any port of the Canal Zone unless such vessel shall be equipped with an efficient apparatus for radio communication, in good working order, in charge of a person skilled in the use of such apparatus, which apparatus shall be capable of transmitting and receiving messages for a distance of at least 100 miles, night or day. This requirement shall not apply to vessels merely transiting the canal or to vessels plying between Canal Zone ports and ports less than 200 miles therefrom.

SEC. 2. That any vessel leaving or attempting to leave a Canal Zone port not equipped as required by section 1 of this act shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $5,000, and each such departure or attempted departure shall constitute a separate offense. Fines shall be recovered in the district court of the Canal Zone, and the amount so recovered shall be a lien upon such vessel, and it may be seized and sold to satisfy same, as well as all costs of the court proceedings.

INSPECTION OF VESSELS NAVIGATING CANAL ZONE WATERS

The bill (H. R. 7508) to provide for the inspection of vessels navigating Canal Zone waters was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, that is rather an important bill, and I think it should be recommitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals.

WITNESSES WITHIN THE JURISDICTION OF CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7509) to authorize certain officials of the Canal Zone to administer oaths and to summon witnesses to testify in matters within the jurisdiction of such officials was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That members of the board of local inspectors, customs officers, quarantine officers, and admeasurers, appointed by the Governor of the Panama Canal, are hereby authorized to administer oaths for the purpose of certifying the correctness of official papers.

Sec. 2. That members of the board of local inspectors, customs officers, quarantine officers, and admeasurers are hereby authorized to summon witnesses to testify in matters within the jurisdiction of said officials, and to require the production of books and papers necessary thereto. The district court of the Canal Zone is hereby authorized to issue processes, at the request of the designated canal officials, to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers, and to punish for contempt of court any who refuse to obey such processes or who refuse to be sworn or to answer any material or proper question after being duly sworn.

PUNISHMENT OF DEPORTED PERSONS RETURNING TO CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7510) to punish persons deported from the Canal Zone who return thereto was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to ask some Senator, if there be any here who knows, where the persons referred to are deported to? Is this a measure looking to the enforcement of the immigration laws or of the criminal laws?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the Panama Canal Zone is very largely under the jurisdiction of the governor of the zone. The bill, I assume, refers to deportations that the governor has authority to make. However, there may be some technical question respecting our immigration laws; and if the Senator from Pennsylvania feels that there is, it might be well to have the bill recommitted.

Mr. REED. I do not make any objection to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who, after having served a sentence of imprisonment in the Canal Zone and after being deported therefrom, voluntarily returns to the Canal Zone shall be deemed guilty of a felony and punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not more than two years, and upon the completion of his sentence he shall be removed from the Canal Zone in accordance with the laws and orders relating to deportation. A voluntary entry into the Canal Zone for any purpose shall be sufficient to constitute a return to the zone within the meaning of this act: Provided, however, That in a case of necessity the Governor of the Panama Canal, in his discretion, may grant a permit to any such person to return to the Canal Zone temporarily; but should he remain in the Canal Zone after the time specified in the permit, he shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this act and punished as herein provided.

REGULATION OF STREET-RAILWAY CARS IN THE CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7511) to regulate the operation of street-railway cars at crossings in the Canal Zone was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. That bill involves a mere police regulation respecting street-railway cars in the Canal Zone.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for a motorman or any other person in control of a street-railway car to run same over or upon any street crossing, road crossing, or street-railway crossing in the Canal Zone, at a speed of more than 12 miles per hour, and without commencing to sound gong, horn, or whistle when at least 100 feet from said crossing, and continuing to sound same until the crossing has been passed.

Sec. 2. That it shall be unlawful for a motorman or any person in control of a street-railway car to run same over or upon any railroad crossing in the Canal Zone, without bringing the car to a full stop at least 10 feet from the nearest rail, and without ascertaining from a view of the railroad track made either by himself or by the conductor that the crossing may be safely passed.

Sec. 3. That a violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100, or imprisonment in jail for not more than 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 5 OF THE PANAMA CANAL ACT

The bill (H. R. 7512) to amend section 5 of the Panama Canal Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. I see no objection to the consideration of that bill. It provides for the regulation of the operation of the locks and approaches thereto.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That that portion of section 5 of the Panama Canal act, approved August 24, 1912, which reads: "The President is authorized to make and from time to time amend regulations governing the operation of the Panama Canal, and the passage and control of vessels through the same or any part thereof, including the locks and approaches thereto, and all rules and regulations affecting pilots and pilotage in the canal or the approaches thereto through the adjacent waters" be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"The President is authorized to make, and from time to time amend, regulations governing the operation of the Panama Canal; the passage and control of vessels through the same or any part thereof, including the locks and approaches thereto; pilots and pilotage in the canal or the approaches thereto through the adjacent waters; the navigation of the harbors and other waters of the Canal Zone, including the inspection of vessels navigating such waters and the licensing of officers of such vessels.

"Any person violating any of the provisions of the rules and regulations established hereunder shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment in jail not exceeding 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

PUBLIC DEFENDER FOR THE CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7513) to provide for the appointment of a public defender for the Canal Zone was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, can the Senator from Wisconsin tell us why a public defender should be appointed for the Canal Zone? We have no such officer in this country.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the Canal Zone, as the Senator from New Mexico appreciates, is a narrow strip of land across the Isthmus. Within that strip of land there are natives residing in thatched bamboo houses by permission and not by reason of any provision of the law. There are also transients in the Canal Zone, men who leave vessels or who are discharged from vessels, or who disembark at the port, and very often those men are without means, without funds, thousands of miles away from home. I think the Governor of the Canal Zone feels that there ought to be some one who could represent those various people who otherwise could not have a defense at all.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator is familiar with the procedure in this country, where the judge usually appoints a member of the bar to represent a person in that situation. Why can not that procedure be successfully followed on the Canal Zone?

Mr. BLAINE. I doubt if such a system would work out very well in the Canal Zone. I am not certain that the judge has the power to do that under the code; I am not familiar with that; but even if the judge has such power, I think this would be a very meritorious provision of law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think a court would have the power which is exercised throughout the United States to supply persons accused of crime with counsel if they are unable to employ counsel for their defense. The only reason for this bill, as I understand, is that the number of such cases involving defendants who drift in from every part of the world and who are left there is so great that it is regarded as rather an onerous burden on the bar.

Mr. BLAINE. That is true, and the bar of the Canal Zone is a very small bar.

Mr. BRATTON. In view of these statements I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Panama Canal shall appoint a duly qualified member of the bar of the Canal Zone as a public defender, whose duty it shall be to represent, in the District Court of the Canal Zone, any person charged with the commission of a crime within the original jurisdiction of said court who is unable to employ counsel for his defense.

Sec. 2. The public defender shall receive a salary of $1,200 per year, together with such of the privileges of a Canal Zone employee as the governor may grant.

CANAL ZONE POSTAL SERVICE

The bill (H. R. 7514) in relation to the Canal Zone postal service was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the object of that bill?

Mr. BLAINE. I have no familiarity whatever with this bill.

Mr. MOSES. I think that bill should be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I second the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

ESTABLISHMENT OF CUSTOMS SERVICE IN THE CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7515) to provide for the establishment of a customs service in the Canal Zone, and other matters, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is an important bill.

Mr. BLAINE. In the absence of objection from the chairman of the committee, I rather assume that bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BINGHAM. It certainly should, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

IMPOUNDING OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS IN CANAL ZONE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7516) in relation to the keeping and impounding of domestic animals in the Canal Zone, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Panama Canal is hereby authorized to make and publish and from time to time amend regulations governing the keeping of domestic animals within the Canal Zone, and prescribing where and under what conditions domestic animals may be permitted to be at large, and when, where, and under what conditions such domestic animals shall be confined. Such regulations shall provide for the impounding of animals; the charges to be paid for the impounding and care of such animals, if claimed, by the owner; the disposition of unclaimed animals; and the disposition of the proceeds of the sale of such unclaimed animals, if sold.

Sec. 2. Any person violating any provision of the regulations established under section 1 of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished accordingly.

Sec. 3. The ordinance enacted by the Isthmian Canal Commission at the one hundred and forty-fifth meeting, July 18, 1908, approved by the Secretary of War August 12, 1908, providing for the muzzling and impounding of dogs, and the ordinance enacted by the Isthmian Canal Commission August 5, 1911, approved by the Secretary of War August 22, 1911, providing for the impounding of stray animals, are hereby repealed.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, that is a mere local police regulation, and I see no objection to it at all.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSPORTATION OF LIQUORS THROUGH CANAL ZONE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7517) to provide for the transportation of liquors under seal through the Canal Zone, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 20 of the national prohibition act is hereby amended by adding after the proviso therein the following additional proviso: "And provided further, That this section shall not apply to the transportation of liquor, under seal, in transit to and from points outside of the Canal Zone over the highways or waterways of the Canal Zone under regulations to be prescribed by the President, when such liquor is not destined for use or for consumption or final delivery in the Canal Zone."

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I rather think that bill is in conformity with the provisions of the recent treaty which has been ratified by the Senate.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE FOR CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7521) to provide a new Code of Civil Procedure for the Canal Zone and to repeal the existing Code of Civil Procedure, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. That bill goes over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand that bill has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT OF PANAMA CANAL ACT

The bill (H. R. 7523) to amend sections 7, 8, and 9 of the Panama Canal act, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MOSES. Ought not that bill also to go to the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know what it is.

Mr. BINGHAM. It deals with court procedure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the bill involves complicated legal questions apparently and is in the same general class of the bills that have already been referred to the Judiciary Committee. I suggest the same action be taken regarding it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MAIL TRANSPORTATION BY MOTOR VEHICLE—LOANS ON ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

The bill (H. R. 9636) to authorize the Postmaster General to permit railroad and electric-car companies to provide mail transportation by motor vehicle in lieu of service by train, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, there is on the calendar, having been reported from the Committee on Finance, Senate bill 1251, relating to the making of loans to veterans upon their adjusted-service certificates, being Calendar No. 510. That bill provides that adjusted-service certificates shall be available for loans without the limitation of two years as originally specified. I desire to offer that bill as a new section to the pending bill so that it may be considered at this session of Congress. I offer it as an amendment to the bill now pending.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that a new bill along the same lines and drawn in such a way as to meet the objections previously raised by the actuaries is before the House and I think is before the Finance Committee. I am not sure whether it has been reported or not, but I understand that it is preferable to the bill which the Senator is now offering as an amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The bill to which I refer has been reported favorably by the Finance Committee of the Senate and is now on the calendar and has been there for some days. If we do not take some action within the next few days the probabilities are that a majority will be desirous of bringing about a final adjournment of Congress, and we will not take any action on the bill. I want to put it in the position where we can secure a final decision on the question, and we can do it in the way I suggest.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator can not get that bill through as an amendment; but if the Senator will substitute the bill the Senator from New York introduced a day or two ago, which, as I said, meets the objections of the actuaries by reducing the amount of interest, I think it might be put through.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have not seen the bill introduced by the Senator from New York and I do not know whether it has been reported favorably. Of course, I want to read it before I offer it as an amendment. I offer the bill to which I have referred as an amendment to the pending bill and should like to have it considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 502 (b) of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended, prohibiting the making of loans to veterans upon their adjusted-service certificates prior to the expiration of two years after the date of the certificates, hereafter loans may be made upon such certificates in accordance with loan basis provided by law at any time after the date of issuance thereof.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I merely desire to make a brief statement, if I may have permission to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Arkansas proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is an element of justice in the principle that runs through this bill. A good many veterans have refrained from availing themselves of the privilege of securing loans on their certificates and they should not be penalized because of that action. Under present conditions many of them are in need, and the purpose of this bill is to put them all on the same basis; to give each veteran the right to obtain a loan without regard to the fact that he has refrained from availing himself of his privilege as long as he has been able to do so.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will say to the Senator that I have the greatest sympathy with the position which he has taken; but it has been pointed out by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs that, if this bill shall be passed in its present form, it will result in the veterans owing money to the Government at the end of the period, because the compound interest at the rate provided by law will more than use up the amount due to the veterans.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If that statement be correct, of course, the bill ought to be amended.

Mr. BINGHAM. That difficulty, I may say, has been corrected in a bill which the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] introduced yesterday, I think, and which I believe is the measure which should be substituted for the bill referred to by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then, may not the pending bill be passed over without prejudice?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, just a moment; I do not desire that it go over with the statement unchallenged that this bill itself would be responsible for the provision in regard to interest and compounding interest. This measure has nothing to do with that, but it is an attempt to relieve a condition which prohibits veterans from obtaining loans in less than two years. It removes that restriction; it deals with that feature of the law only. We should pass a separate measure or provide in some bill by way of amendment to abolish the 4½ per cent interest rate compounded. I think that is ridiculous and should be corrected. The interest should be reduced to, say, a straight 2 per cent on existing loans.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the bill passed over temporarily. The Chair notes that the Senator from New York is now present.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Let the bill be passed over temporarily.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLACK. Is it in order to move to take up the bill with reference to adjusted-service certificates?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That would not be in order under the unanimous-consent agreement and could only be done by unanimous consent. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 744) for the rehabilitation of the Stanfield project, Oregon, was announced as next in order.

Mr. METCALF. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4781) authorizing an emergency appropriation for the relief of needy and distressed residents of the District of Columbia and for the temporary care of transient and homeless persons in said District was announced as next in order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let that go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection a moment? May I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] to the fact that the Costigan bill is now up?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Washington, with whom I conferred yesterday, and who are interested in the subject of relief for the veterans, are endeavoring to bring about an accord with leaders in the House; and I do not like to introduce the subject now for fear of creating irritation which may defeat the objective.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSIENT SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER

The bill (H. R. 8818) to amend the second paragraph of section 5 of the act entitled "An act to amend Title II of an act approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1066; U. S. C., title 39), regulating postal rates, and for other purposes," was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 5 of the act entitled "An act to amend Title II of an act approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1066; U. S. C., title 39), regulating postal rates, and for other purposes," approved May 29, 1928 (45 Stat. 941; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 39, sec. 287), be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 203. The rate of postage on publications entered as second-class matter, when sent by others than the publisher or news agent, shall be 1 cent for each 2 ounces or fraction thereof, except when the postage at the rates prescribed for fourth-class matter is lower, in which case the latter rates shall apply: Provided, That these rates shall also apply to sample copies of publications entered as second-class matter mailed in excess of the quantity entitled by law to be sent at the pound rates, and to copies mailed by publishers to other than subscribers or to persons who are not properly includable in the legitimate list of subscribers required by law."

RESPONSIBILITY OF POSTMASTERS

The bill (S. 4046) to fix more equitably the responsibility of postmasters was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, this bill is required because of the present custom which fastens upon a postmaster the responsibility of accounting for and refunding all losses of postal funds caused by subordinates in excess of the amount covered by their personal bonds. Should a clerk, for example, be bonded for $5,000 and misappropriate funds to the extent of $10,000, the clerk would be held under his personal bond for $5,000, but the additional $5,000 loss would be charged against the postmaster and his bond. This is true, even though the postmaster has not handled any of the funds in question and is not personally to blame, directly or indirectly, for the loss.

It appears unjust to regard him as responsible for the wrongful acts of his subordinates, who are not selected by him, being civil-service employees, and who are themselves bonded. The rule now existing in such cases is not applied by State or municipal governments, by banks, or by corporations. The present practice appears unbusinesslike and should be abandoned. In this connection it is pointed out that the proposed legislation would not relieve or protect careless or neglectful postmasters or those who deliberately misuse Federal funds or connive with others to that end. It would only apply to cases where the postmaster himself is blameless.

The Postmaster General, I will say, has approved this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, there is a fundamental defect in this bill. It is that discretion to relieve postmasters of liability is vested in the Postmaster General. It gives him quasi judicial power to pass upon matters of this kind. It inevitably will lead to discrimination. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LOANS ON ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

The bill (S. 4569) relating to loans to veterans on their adjusted-service certificates was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have talked with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I wonder if he has given some consideration to the idea of substituting for this bill the bill which I introduced the other day, which gives immediate loans on the certificates, but fixes the rate at 4 per cent instead of 3 per cent as the Senator has suggested in his bill.

Mr. NORRIS. The rate in this bill is 3 per cent.

Mr. COPELAND. The bill which I have presented, which is pending here, has been considered by the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and representatives of the Veterans' Administration testified and said that the rate could be fixed at 4 per cent and then would be actuarially sound; that the 4 per cent would bring the value of the certificates in 1945 to their face, while 3 per cent or any lower rate would not do so. The significant thing about it is, of course, that it gives the veterans who are not now permitted it, by reason of the 2-year clause, the right to receive their money at once; and then the rate on all the certificates is placed at 4 per cent, which, according to the report from the House which I have in my hand, would preserve intact the actuarial features of the existing law.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, what is it that the Senator desires?

Mr. COPELAND. I desire to substitute Senate bill 4925.

Mr. NORRIS. Where is that bill now?

Mr. COPELAND. It is lying on the desks of Senators.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, my own idea is that 3 per cent, compounded annually, is as high an interest rate as we ought to charge. I do not believe we ought to try to make a profit out of these loans to veterans. Four per cent compound interest, running through a series of years, will eat up almost anything; and 3 per cent will amount to an enormous sum. The only objection the Senator has, I think, is completely cured in this bill on the last page.

But in the case of any such loan heretofore made by the administrator out of the United States Government life-insurance fund, the fund shall be entitled to receive interest to the date of maturity of the loan at the rate agreed upon at the time such loan was made, but the amount by which such agreed interest exceeds interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, compounded annually, from the time such loan was made to the date of maturity thereof, shall be paid out of the adjusted-service certificate fund created under section 505 of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will consent to the substitution of Senate bill 4925, so that we may immediately make available the loans, I should have no objection to letting the 3 per cent go to conference.

Mr. NORRIS. What part of the bill has the Senator in mind that is different from this, except the rate of interest? Is there anything else in his bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator, in his bill, make available immediately loans on these certificates?

Mr. NORRIS. I think under the law they would be immediately available; would they not? The two years have expired.

Mr. COPELAND. No.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. The whole basis of the compensation agreement with the Government was made at 4 per cent, and this proposal takes away the whole basis of the adjusted-compensation certificates. They were all based on 4 per cent interest to 1945.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let the bill go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I beg the Senator not to object to the bill. It is very important.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the Senator will yield, I made an effort a little while ago to get favorable action upon this bill which the Senator from New York presented, which has been very carefully considered by the House Ways and Means Committee, which the actuaries approved as fair, and which corrects the injustice to which attention was recently called by the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Florida, permitting veterans who have just received their adjusted-compensation certificates to borrow on those immediately, the rate of interest being brought down so that at the end of the period they will not owe the Government money, but there will be a slight balance due them. I should have no objection to that; but in the present form of the measure, since we are considering bills unobjected to, I think I shall have to object.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will withhold the objection for a moment, I beg the Senator from Nebraska to accept this proposal, which is not mine, although I presented it here. This was worked out by the Veterans of Foreign Wars and by the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. NORRIS. The objection I have to it is the rate of interest. Four per cent compound interest is too much to charge these veterans.

Mr. COPELAND. Then let the Senator accept this bill, and change the rate to 3 per cent instead of 4.

Mr. NORRIS. All right.

Mr. COPELAND. Then the House and the conferees can adjust the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. There ought to be added as an amendment to the Senator's bill the following language from this bill, commencing on page 2, line 6:

But in the case of any such loan heretofore made by the administrator out of the United States Government life-insurance fund, the fund shall be entitled to receive interest to the date of maturity of the loan at the rate agreed upon at the time such loan was made, but the amount by which such agreed interest exceeds interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, compounded annually, from the time such loan was made to the date of maturity thereof, shall be paid out of the adjusted-service certificate fund created under section 505 of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended.

If the Senator will add that, and change the rate of interest to 3 instead of 4 per cent, I will agree to the substitution.

Mr. COPELAND. I accept that proposition.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President—

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. I should like to ask the Senator from New York which provision of his bill provides for an immediate loan to be made by the Government after a certificate has been issued to a veteran.

Mr. COPELAND. The bill which I presented changes the existing law so that the loan may be made to any veteran. It cuts out the language "after the expiration of two years after the date of the certificate."

Mr. BLACK. What section is that?

Mr. COPELAND. That is in section 642, subparagraph (b).

Mr. BLACK. I meant, where is it in the Senator's amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. It begins on page 1, subparagraph (b):

(b) Any national bank, or any bank or trust company incorporated under the laws of any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia (hereinafter in this section called bank), is authorized to loan to any veteran upon his promissory note secured by his adjusted-service certificate (with or without the consent of the beneficiary thereof) any amount not in excess of the loan basis (as defined in subdivision (g) of this section) of the certificate.

Mr. BLACK. I see that; but the bill which was reported by the Finance Committee, which I had urged them to recommend for some few months, provides that a veteran can borrow money from the Government whether the certificate is 1 day old or 2 years old.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator will see from the report that the existing law is taken, and these items in brackets are cut out by this bill, so that it permits loans to any veteran at any time. That is the provision, and, as I have said, this was worked out by the Ways and Means Committee of the House, after very careful study, and it has been approved by the Veterans of Foreign Wars. I think we should accept the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska and substitute Senate bill 4925 for the Senator's bill and accept the amendment which he suggests.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I accept the proposition of striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the bill of the Senator from New York, with the changes suggested—that is, changing 4 per cent to 3 per cent, and the language commencing on page 2 of the bill with the word "but" in line 6.

Mr. KEAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I beg the Senator from New Jersey to let this bill pass. We have declined to give a bonus to the ex-service men. There are 200,000 veterans who have now applied for the first time for adjusted-service certificates.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. I would be delighted to have this bill passed. I am in thorough sympathy with it, but the basis of the compensation on which the adjusted-service certificates was given to the veterans was that they would mature in 1945, and the basis of calculation was 4 per cent compounded.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from New Jersey that the amendment which the Senator from New York has accepted to that part of the bill meets that proposition fully. That has been looked into by experts. I myself looked into it as much as I could at the time I introduced the bill, to which I gave a great deal of consideration. I went into the details of it and had a good many conferences with the drafting bureau, and the language which the Senator from New York has agreed to accept I think will completely meet the proposition suggested by the Senator from New Jersey.

Outside of that, why should we want to lend money to these veterans and charge them a rate of interest which would be an outrage, a regular Shylock proposition? Are we going to charge a rate of interest compounded annually at 4 per cent, which will eat up every credit they have now, and instead of the loan being a benefit make it a detriment in every case? Nobody can pay 4 per cent interest, compounded annually, for 10 or 15 years. It is simply a gesture; it would not mean anything.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey withdraw his objection?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, United States bonds at the present time are selling on practically a $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent basis. If the United States had to borrow any money to-day, they would have to pay $4\frac{1}{4}$ or $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. They could not borrow money for less than that. I do not think it is fair to the United States that 4 per cent should be charged, and before this loan was made to these soldiers the Secretary of the Treasury took certificates and made the United States pay 4 per cent on those certificates, when he could have borrowed the money at less, because he had to maintain this fund at 4 per cent.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator can trust Mr. BACHARACH, of his own State, who has introduced this bill. This bill will go to conference, and there will be testimony taken as to the actuarial features of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. On that ground, I withdraw the objection, if the bill can be passed; but I still feel that the United States ought to get 4 per cent on the funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws his objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York is to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the first sentence of subdivision (b) of section 502 of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 642 (b)), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) Any national bank, or any bank or trust company incorporated under the laws of any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia (hereinafter in this section called bank), is authorized to loan to any veteran upon his promissory note secured by his adjusted-service certificate (with or without the consent of the beneficiary thereof) any amount not in excess of the loan basis (as defined in subdivision (g) of this section) of the certificate."

Sec. 2. (a) Subdivisions (c) and (4) of section 502 of such act, as amended (U. S. C., title 38, secs. 642 (c) and 642 (d)), are hereby amended by striking out "6 per cent" wherever occurring in such subdivisions and inserting in lieu thereof "4 per cent."

(b) Subdivision (1) of section 502 of such act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 38, sec. 642 (1)), is amended by striking out " $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent" and inserting in lieu thereof "3 per cent."

(c) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall not apply with respect to interest accrued prior to the date of the enactment of this act.

Sec. 3. Subdivision (m) of section 502 of such act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 38, sec. 642 (m)), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(m) Loans made by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs under this section may at his option be made out of the United States Government life-insurance fund, or out of the adjusted-service certificate fund created under section 505. In case of loans made out of the United States Government life-insurance fund the fund shall be entitled to receive interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, compounded annually, but, in respect of interest on any such loan accruing after this subdivision as amended takes effect, the amount by which interest at such rate exceeds 3 per cent per annum, compounded annually, shall be paid to the United States Government life-insurance fund out of the adjusted-service certificate fund, but in the case of any such loan heretofore made by the administrator out of the United States Government life-insurance fund, the fund shall be entitled to receive interest to the date of maturity of the loan at the rate agreed upon at the time such loan was made, but the amount by which such agreed interest exceeds interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, compounded annually, from the time such loan was made to the date of maturity thereof, shall be paid out of the adjusted-service certificate fund created under section 505 of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I do not propose to object to this interest rate of 3 per cent, but I do feel that any interest rate at which this Government lends money less than that on long-time bonds it has outstanding or can sell upon the market is absolutely wrong, even though it is the money of the Government of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. HOWELL. In just a moment. But what have we done? We have heretofore established a precedent. We have loaned $5,000,000 to the Dollar Steamship Line at a quarter of 1 per cent for 20 years. We have violated every principle of business in connection with loans of that character, and I insist that now we ought to take to heart these facts: That we erred when we embarked upon such a policy, that the precedent will rise before us on every occasion when the question of lending money comes before Congress, and that if possible, we should ultimately get back on the right track by ending such an uneconomic policy.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know whether the report from the Finance Committee has been called to the attention of the Senate or not. I am not going to take the time to read the whole of it, but I will read just a part of it. The Senate knows that the bill was reported without recommendation, and I want to call attention to just a part of the report.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will let the bill pass, because the Finance Committee has not acted upon the bill which we are now considering. It has not been before the Finance Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. What bill is it?

Mr. COPELAND. It is Senate bill 4925, which has been thoroughly considered by the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and has been slightly amended here this morning.

Mr. SMOOT. Where did the bill come from?

Mr. COPELAND. I introduced it in the Senate on the 15th of June. It came from Mr. BACHARACH, of the House of Representatives, and I think the Senator will find that the Veterans' Administration considers this bill actuarially sound. I would not say it was recommended by the Veterans' Administration, but at least they have passed upon it and said there was no actuarial objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand, in the bill now before the Senate, even in the bill to which the Senator refers, the rate has been cut from 4 per cent to 3 per cent.

Mr. COPELAND. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I want to call attention to what it means and what the loss to the Government would be.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we understood that. That was brought out, and we believe that in the House that may be corrected if there is an actuarial mistake.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the place to correct it, and not in the House, if we are going to correct it at all. General Hines's letter addressed to the Finance Committee was virtually the report of the committee, and the committee reported the bill to the Senate without recommendation. I do not want to read the whole of his letter, but I want to read just this part of it:

In view of the fact (1) that the effect on Government financing of the granting of loans on adjusted-service certificates in increased amounts, has been and is a decidedly adverse one, and (2) that the present rate of interest being charged is considered most reasonable, and (3) a change in the interest rate to 3 per cent per annum compounded annually would result in reduced earnings to the United States in the amount of $398,623,833 (the preceding figure is based upon approximate amount of loans outstanding at March 31, 1932, of $1,350,000,000), I feel constrained to recommend against favorable consideration of this proposed measure.

Although this bill has not been presented by this administration to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, I wish to inform you that on a similar measure he stated that in view of the cost involved, it would not be in accord with the financial program of the President.

This administration can not recommend favorably regarding any further liberalization of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended, at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7233) to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business, until we complete the call of the calendar. It will take only a few moments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPEAL OF OBSOLETE STATUTES

The bill (H. R. 7121) to repeal obsolete statutes, and to improve the United States Code, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. He was not able to attend the committee meeting last Monday morning. The committee requested that I report this bill and the next calendar number, a bill (H. R. 9877) to repeal obsolete sections of the Revised Statutes omitted from the United States Code. They are intended to repeal certain obsolete sections of the Revised Statutes. The House committee has been studying the problem for some two years. These sections have been checked by every department of the Government that is interested, and they have all recommended that the bills be passed with the possible exception of one section. As to that, an amendment was suggested on page 7 of H. R. 9877, that Revised Statute 5599 be eliminated from the bill.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and I served as a subcommittee investigating these sections. While we did not personally make a study of each section, the Senator from Montana had an examination made by persons in his office and had written to the other members of the committee a letter stating that he was satisfied that the two bills ought to pass. My understanding is that the passage of the bills will save a large sum of money in reprinting the Revised Statutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, there appear to be several hundred at least of the sections proposed to be repealed.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; more than a thousand. In Calendar No. 1039 there are more than a thousand.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; there are more than a thousand sections to be repealed. In most part they are intended to eliminate obsolete statutes?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has the Senator or the Committee on the Judiciary checked over each section and made a study of it to know whether the provisions are actually obsolete?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will say frankly to the Senator that the Senate committee did not do that, but it has been done with great care by the House committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the bill go over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Delaware can not state with what care a committee at the other end of the Capitol may have done its work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 9877) to repeal obsolete sections of the Revised Statutes omitted from the United States Code was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. Mr. HASTINGS subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar Nos. 1038 and 1039, the bill (H. R. 7121) to repeal obsolete statutes and to improve the United States Code, and the bill (H. R. 9877) to repeal obsolete sections of the Revised Statutes omitted from the United States Code, may be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be entered.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING SECRETARY, HAWAII

The bill (H. R. 308) to provide for the appointment of an acting secretary of the Territory of Hawaii during the absence or illness of the secretary was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM], who reported the bill, is not present at the moment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest that it be passed over.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, it is merely to permit the secretary to take charge when the governor is off the island. It is a very simple measure.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have not had an opportunity to study it. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 69 of the act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900 (U. S. C., title 48, sec. 534), is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"The secretary may, with the approval of the governor, designate some other officer of the government of the Territory of Hawaii to act as secretary during his temporary absence or during his illness. Such designation and approval shall be in writing and shall be filed in the office of the governor, and a copy thereof, certified by the governor, shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior of the United States. Such person so designated shall, during the temporary absence or illness of the secretary, be known as the acting secretary of the Territory of Hawaii, and shall have and exercise all the powers and duties of the secretary, except those provided for by section 70 of this act (U. S. C., title 48, sec. 535). Such acting secretary shall serve without additional compensation, but the secretary shall be responsible and liable on his official bond for all acts done by the acting secretary in the performance of his duties as acting secretary."

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 794, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 127) authorizing appropriations for the maintenance by the United States of membership in the International Council of Scientific Unions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. METCALF. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] objected when it was called before, but has withdrawn his objection.

There being no objection the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums, not to exceed $5,042.77, as may be necessary to enable the United States to maintain membership in the International Council of Scientific Unions, such sums to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Wallace, of Paradise, Tex., as reimbursement of purchase money paid for real estate formerly owned by William Lyons and sold by the collector of internal revenue at a distraint sale March 14, 1911.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM R. NOLAN

The bill (H. R. 7656) for the relief of William R. Nolan. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, to strike out "$613.75" and insert "$350," so as to read:

Nolan for pay and allowance for the period from January 29, 1926, to April 14, 1926, and also for any disbursements and expenses incurred by reason of an injury incurred in line of duty.

Martin, of Paducah, Ky., from December 8, 1930, to August 5, 1931, and statutory fees for the services so rendered and approved as to the amounts by the Department of Justice, are as follows: Fee account for quarter ending January 31, 1931, covering that portion of said account

Whereas by oversight the reappointment of said Martin as such commissioner was not made on December 8, 1930, but was thereafter made and entered of record on August 5, 1931, with the result that he served as de facto commissioner during such interim, and incurred the expenses incident to the maintenance of such office and performed the services thereof for which the statutory fees allowable are in the amount hereinabove set forth, the payment of which has been disallowed by the Department of Justice because such order of reappointment was not made or entered of record: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated and set apart the sum of $980, to be applied and paid by the Department of Justice in settlement of and by way of compensation for the services rendered by said de facto commissioner from December 8, 1930, to August 5, 1931, as hereinabove set forth.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT REPORT ON MINERAL ACREAGE

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a copy of a report (Senate Document 93, this session) from the Department of Agriculture made in response to Senate Resolution 377, which I offered last session. I consider this report of the utmost importance to the American farmer. It offers him new liquid assets and at the same time promises much for the stabilization of the oil industry and the orderly conservation of our mineral resources. It commits the Federal administration to the economic soundness of a new program of agricultural land policy. This report has been through the testing fire of economic criticism and has received favorable reaction from the National Land Use Conference, leading land economists, and, most significant, from individuals in high command of each of the three great American farm organizations.

This report should receive most favorable bipartisan consideration as it enunciates a policy for the relief of our farmers which was espoused by the honorable Vice President Charles Curtis in behalf of the Osage Indians a quarter of a century ago. This policy made the Osages the richest people per capita on the globe. Now, this report proposes a similar land policy for the enhancement of land values of farmers owning possibly 1,000,000,000 acres in the most stricken agricultural areas. It will eventually, if adopted, directly affect every State in the Union except a possible dozen and indirectly it will bring, I am confident, vast benefit to every State in the entire Nation, if suggestions here made are widely applied and encouraged. I hope that every Senator will carefully study this report and make its contents available to the farmers in his State.

For the first time in American history the Department of Agriculture recognizes as a farm crop the subsurface mineral rights of the farmer. In this report the department suggests methods whereby the farmer can figuratively extend the point of his plow to the cultivation of his subsurface acreage and control for his own greatest benefit those subsurface natural resources which he owns to-day but which, when they are exploited, rarely benefit him to any extent.

This report shows how, through cooperative pooling of mineral rights in potential oil and gas areas, every farmer in such areas can enhance the per acre value of his land just as the Farmers' Union members of Kansas and Oklahoma have done.

The report significantly says:

Pooling increases the market value of mineral rights in a way analogous to that in which fire insurance increases the value of individual buildings. Whatever may be the normal probable ratio of the number of producing tracts to the total number of tracts—for instance, 1 to 20—the ratio will be more nearly realized, in the long run, if many tracts are considered.

In other words, if farmers in potential oil and gas areas have one chance in twenty of striking oil or gas on their lands as individuals, the application of the binomial theorem shows that where 100 such tracts are pooled the chances that one or more tracts will eventually strike oil are increased to 99 out of 100. This creates new values, new farm assets, by increasing the per acre value of those mineral rights.

The report says:

The individual farmer, by pooling, substitutes a more stable for a less stable potential income.

In other words, pooling converts a gambler's risk into a business, liquefies frozen farm assets and fortifies the farmer's position. It gives him all the cake where heretofore he has had to be content with the frosting only. It inaugurates 2-dimension farming.

Records show that the Osages, by their collective bargaining power, have received an average of $150 per acre for their mineral leases while the average independent farmer receives an average of possibly $2.

This report covers 80 typewritten pages and represents a full year of study, research, investigation, and constructive criticism. It represents a new departure in our general land-use planning program.

I am proud that the entire history of this movement is of Oklahoma origin.

The potentialities of this movement were first called to my attention last year when two Oklahoma City citizens, Mr. Aldrich Blake and Mr. Ernest Chamberlain, proposed to me that the Senate ask the Bureau of Agricultural Economics to investigate and report on the extent and value of mineral acreage as a farm asset. Their request was supported by Mr. John A. Simpson, national president of the Farmers' Union. I also received interested inquiries from Mr. Chester Gray, of the Farm Bureau Federation. At the time Vice President CURTIS and Mr. Fred Brenckman, of the National Grange, expressed their interest in the proposed inquiry.

It is my understanding that it is now proposed to interest the three great farm organizations in the steps recommended to conserve for the American farmers the vast mineral resources which they now own but which represent frozen assets. With only a fraction of the success attained in the case of the Osage Indians, this movement may, as it gains momentum, liquidate thousands of delinquent taxes, pay interest on mortgages, and fortify the farmer against depressions in commodity markets.

A map which accompanies this report shows its applicability to vast areas in the South, in the West, the North, the East, and particularly in the vast midcontinent area.

Every Senator should study this map to see the application which the principles laid down in this report make to his own State. I am also appending to this statement estimates by States of the areas susceptible of adaptation to this pooling principle. If these estimates, quoted from responsible sources, are only 25 per cent correct, agriculture in America is in the position of a bankrupt merchant who has long been ignorant of a treasure chest under the floor of his establishment.

I confess that the magnitude of the possibilities which this investigation reveals was a complete surprise to me despite the enthusiastic espousal of the basic principles by those who first suggested this inquiry to me.

The report, moreover, but scratches the surface of the possibilities of farm relief by mobilization in the farmer's behalf of his frozen mineral resources. Millions in other mineral deposits are owned by farmers to-day, and managers of those pioneer pools now being formed are now aware of deposits of sulphur, gypsum, asphalt, and many other substances.

Instead of waiting for years for development of his own individual property and then selling out at the first opportunity in advance of actual development, the farmer, this report indicates, can put his mineral rights to work for him at once by participating, through his acreage, in development of active areas. The wildcat areas of to-day are the bonanza areas of to-morrow in mineral development. Neither the farmers nor the mining engineers can predict the future of oil development with any certainty.

I am glad that this report does honor to the name of John Palmer, of Pawhuska, Okla., now aging and blind. He is an adopted son of the Osages, who at the time of the allotment of the tribal lands contended against those who would divide the subsurface acreage along with the surface in the allotment to individual Indians. He declared that no one knew where oil and gas would be found on the reservation. He said:

He who takes more than his fair share of the tribal wealth is a thief. He who takes less is a fool.

Senators, this is an Indian's version of the Golden Rule, which, if applied, might solve most of our economic difficulties.

With the aid of the Vice President, then representing Kansas in this body, the Osage mineral rights were pooled and held in common. As a result each member of the Osage Tribe has received $110,000, a total of $241,000,000; whereas their actual oil and gas production was less than that of many areas in which the farmers received little or nothing for their mineral rights.

This report shows that potential oil and gas areas of the United States are estimated by the American Petroleum Institute. Their report shows that structures and strata similar to those from which oil and gas are now produced cover 57 per cent of the area of the United States, mainly in agricultural areas. Farmers who pool their land will profit eventually from exploration, whether oil and gas are found or not, just as the Osages received most of their money, not from oil and gas but from lease rentals paid pending exploration. The report here suggests that pools in which tracts are selected for mineral potentiality should have greater prospects for success than the Osages, whose reservation was given to them without consideration of such possibilities, and, in fact, has produced less oil and gas than is found in many areas of similar extent.

This is not an untried theory. Farmers in Oklahoma, under the guidance of pools which are a part of the Farmers' Union activities, have led in the movement which is launched on a 10,000,000-acre program with mineral rights under more than a million acres already assembled in Oklahoma, Kansas, Texas, Colorado, and New Mexico. The report of the department shows how practically valueless mineral rights in these States have now achieved a per acre value of $15.32—page 44. The first of these pools, the Panhandle Cooperative Royalty Co., is reported as having a per acre appraised value of $28.14.

The only weakness of the report seems to lie in the fact that it has curtailed the recommendations of a tentative and unofficial draft which set forth a complete organization set-up. This was an adaptation of the plan in operation at the present time. I feel that committee hearings will bring out the definite plan which farmers should follow and make it possible for Congress to give some assistance.

We have argued long and earnestly over farm liabilities, farm debts, farm taxes. Here is the other side of the picture. Here is a new farm asset, frozen, unavailable to its owners under individual ownership. With the conservative background of approval from the agricultural economists of the Government this report offers the basis for creating new farm assets, values which never existed before.

Is it possible that we will adjourn with this opportunity before us and not take the obvious steps which will bid Godspeed to this new program for farm relief and economic stability?

Incidentally, the report asserts that the adoption of the pooling plan will add to the stability of the oil industry itself, promote greater conservation and unity of purpose on the part of land owners and producing operators.

VETERANS' RELIEF

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, and that it may lie on the table, a very interesting and instructive article on veterans' relief published by the New York Trust Co.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[The Index, published by the New York Trust Co.]

VETERANS' RELIEF—POSTWAR LEGISLATION AND INCREASED COSTS

In the Index of July, 1931, an article entitled "Rising Costs of Government" presented an analysis of the general upward trend of governmental costs since 1913. An article entitled a "Challenge to the American People," published in May, 1932, dealt generally with the current position and especially with the imperative need for drastic retrenchments in our governmental expenditures. In this and succeeding articles we propose to present and analyze separately the more important elements of governmental costs.

By far the largest single item in the Federal Budget at the present time is the cost of veterans' relief. Appropriations made this year for veterans' relief amounted to $928,387,795, or approximately one-fourth of the total Federal appropriations for all purposes.

Between 1918 and June 30, 1931, more than $6,000,000,000 was spent by the Federal Government in various forms of relief to veterans of the World War and their dependents and beneficiaries. State governments have spent for similar purposes more than $580,000,000. By 1945 the Federal Government will have spent $21,500,000,000 under existing relief commitments, according to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, who points out that the sum is equal to "the cost of this country's actual participation in the war." The commitments, however, will not be discharged

Year by year since the war ended the demands for relief have progressively widened. The immediate climax has been reached with the agitation for cash payment of adjusted-service compensation amounting to over $3,600,000,000. This sum is not due for payment until 1945.

COSTS MORE THAN "DOLE"

Postwar demands have increased enormously the cost not only of World War relief but of that in respect of other wars. Since 1930, for instance, pension payments in respect of the Spanish-American War have multiplied tenfold. Pensions are still being paid to widows of soldiers who took part in the War of 1812, as well as to survivors and relatives of veterans of the Civil, Spanish-American, Mexican, and Indian Wars. As of October 31, 1931, a total of $14,810,349,455 had been disbursed for relief of veterans of all wars, their dependents, or beneficiaries. Each year the costs increase.

The general tendency of postwar legislation has been to change the basis of veterans' relief by diverting increasing amounts to men who suffered no disability due to war service. Veterans' relief, in fact, as a result of this tendency, is in danger of becoming, in some respects, a thinly disguised "dole" system.

In a single year the United States now spends nearly twice as much for veterans' relief as the British Government spent in 11 years for its "dole" or unemployment insurance. As previously stated, appropriations made this year for veterans' relief aggregate $928,387,795. Between 1920 and 1931 Great Britain's unemployment scheme cost that country $525,000,000.

WAR-TIME PROVISIONS

To understand the present position it is necessary to trace the steps leading up to it. The United States entered the World War in April, 1917. The first American troops were landed in France at the end of June. By the time the armistice was signed our military forces numbered 4,355,000 officers and men. Of the total, 2,151,644, or a little less than half, served overseas. A considerable proportion of these took no part in actual fighting. Our total casualties, including 234,300 wounded, amounted to 350,300 officers and men, or 8 per cent of our total mobilized forces.

The American minimum pay was $30 a month. British infantrymen received approximately $7 a month. France paid her soldiers a minimum of $1.75 per month; the German pay was $3 a month; the Belgian, $2; and the Italian, $1.75. Moreover, making an allowance of $2 for daily maintenance, or total earnings of $90 monthly, American soldiers received a fair wage in comparison to the average American worker, who, according to the National Bureau of Economic Research, received about $89 monthly in 1918.

In addition, family allowances paid to American soldiers' dependents during the period of active service were at a higher rate than in any other country. Congressional appropriations for these allowances totaled $298,615,000. Another appropriation, amounting to $237,979,340, was made in 1919 to give each man on discharge, irrespective of length of service and whether he had been overseas or not, an immediate cash discharge fee of $60. This amount was larger than that paid by any other country to men with comparable length of service. Another $718,666,370 was spent between 1918 and 1925 for maintenance, support, and training of veterans trained and restored to civilian occupations under the Federal scheme for vocational rehabilitation. These three items alone accounted for a sum of $1,255,260,710.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE

Immediately after the United States entered the World War President Wilson and Congress took up the question of providing for those who suffered injuries or sickness and for the dependents of those who died here during active service. It was generally agreed that the evils of the Civil War pension system should be avoided, and with this object expressly in mind it was decided to develop a comprehensive governmental insurance scheme open to all persons engaged in the forces. Accordingly the war-risk insurance plan was enacted by Congress in October, 1917.

By this plan Congress undertook to grant, in the words of the first Director of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, "governmental insurance to soldiers and sailors at a premium rate which took account only of the peace-time risk, leaving the whole cost of operation, the cost of disability benefit, the cost due to the war hazard to be borne by the country at large as part of the cost of the war." The original intention was to provide, in this way, allowances for death and disability "resulting from war service." From the start, however, the plan was somewhat wider, for it not only provided for death and disability resulting from war service but also gave policyholders the privilege, on termination of war service, of converting policies, on favorable terms, into any of the usual forms of Government life or endowment insurance.

Each member of the forces was permitted to take out war-risk insurance to a total amount of $10,000 at $8 per thousand. Drives were undertaken, at the expense of the Government, to familiarize all members of the forces with the program. Before the war ended more than 4,000,000 men and women in military service had taken out policies. As of June 30, 1931, disbursements under the plan amounted to $1,374,004,790, from which $450,000,000 may be deducted for premiums paid by policyholders themselves, leaving a net cost to the country, to the end of June last, of nearly a billion dollars. In addition, more than 640,000 policies have been converted into United States Government life and endowment insurance with a total value of more than $3,000,000,000.

COMPENSATION APART FROM INSURANCE

In addition to family allowances and the war-risk insurance plans, Congress, in 1917, passed legislation providing for:

1. Cash compensation to veterans for injuries or sickness contracted or aggravated during service, irrespective of whether the veteran had taken out war-risk insurance.
2. Cash allowances for widows and other dependents of those who died or were killed during or as a result of war service.
3. Medical, surgical, and hospitalization services for all disabled veterans whose sickness or injuries resulted in any degree from war service.

Under these provisions, disabled men have been and are paid various amounts according to the degree of disability, calculated on the basis of impairment of normal earning power. Payments are made for temporary or permanent, partial or complete disability in amounts ranging from $8 to $250 per month. In case of death, the veteran's widow receives $30 a month, with additional allowances for children. If the deceased veteran was unmarried, monthly allowances are paid to other dependents. The "compensation" allowances are in addition to those received under the war-risk insurance scheme.

As of October 31, 1931, 313,848 World War veterans were receiving compensation for disabilities, apart from that under the war-risk insurance scheme; compensation was also being paid to dependents of 96,787 veterans whose death occurred in or resulted from service in the World War. The cost of compensation, up to June 30, 1931, was approximately $1,800,000,000.

The intention of the various measures enumerated, according to William G. McAdoo, then Secretary of the Treasury, was to provide "a substitute for, and to make unnecessary future pension laws to cover this war." It was generally felt that passage of the various acts in 1917 provided just and equitable arrangements for the contingencies involved.

Shortly after the war, however, the compensation and hospitalization provisions were liberalized, and were applied not only to World War veterans but veterans and dependents of veterans of other wars. Subsequently, a series of "veteran relief" bills have been passed by Congress, sometimes over a presidential veto.

The general tendency of postwar liberalization has been to depart more and more from the original, fundamental principle that relief, whether in the shape of pensions, disability allowances, compensation, or hospital treatment should be granted, primarily, because of death or injuries actually due to war service. Moreover, "liberalization" has been extended to veterans of other wars. It is impossible here to detail all the amendments to former legislation which have resulted. A few representative examples may be noticed.

Pensions previously granted in respect of war-service disabilities to veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, the Boxer rebellion were allowed, by an act passed in 1920, to men suffering from mental or physical disabilities, irrespective of whether the disability was connected with war service. In addition, pensions were granted to such veterans over 62 years of age and with 90 days' service, whether suffering from disability or not. Under these provisions, the number of such pensioners increased from 30,432 in 1920, when the amendments were passed, to 235,463 in May this year. The cost of the pensions has been multiplied tenfold in 10 years and, at the present time, 30 years after the Spanish-American War, in number and amount, these pensions stand at the highest point ever reached.

Under the emergency officers' act, compensation was awarded for complete or partial disability, sometimes certified by lay witnesses only, to a number of former officers, some of whom were and are regularly employed by the governmental departments.

HOSPITALIZATION

Hospitalization facilities and benefits were made available to veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and Boxer rebellion as well as to veterans of the World War in respect to certain ailments and diseases regardless of whether such ailments or diseases were due to military service or not. A series of "presumptive" acts, whereby it is presumed that diseases and injuries in general developed under certain conditions after discharge from the service might have originated in war service have further widened the scope of medical and hospital benefits. As a consequence of numerous "liberalizing" provisions in this respect, patients receiving free medical and hospital treatment have multiplied, the facilities for giving such treatment have constantly expanded, and the costs to the country have steadily risen.

In his report for the year 1931 the Director of the Veterans' Bureau pointed out that no less than 52 per cent of the cases in hospitals and 75 per cent of the recent admissions were in respect of non-service-connected disabilities. The director observed: "If it be the policy of our Government to furnish hospitalization to veterans of all wars, then the existing and authorized Government facilities will have to be widely and materially increased to meet future demands."

Illustrating the consequence of opening the hospitals to veterans with nonservice diseases and disabilities, it may be noted that whereas, in 1925, 63,569 out of 76,812 hospital admissions were in respect of service-connected disabilities, in 1931 the position was completely reversed, 86,850 out of 113,649 admissions being in respect of nonservice disabilities. In addition, during the year ending October 31, 1931, no less than 838,845 patients received free out-treatment and a total of 2,138,258 physical examinations were made for all purposes. As of June 30, last year, the cost of hospitalization and hospital construction, since 1919, amounted to $627,378,112.

COMPENSATION FOR NONSERVICE DISABILITIES

Postwar "liberalizing" amendments have also increasingly extended disability allowances and compensation to men who suffered no disability actually due to war service, while payments are often continued to men who have subsequently recovered from their disabilities.

At the close of last year 1,102,814 persons were receiving monthly veterans' relief allowances of one kind and another. Of this number 313,737 were veterans with service-connected disabilities, 326,395 were veterans whose disabilities were not connected with war service. Up to March 31, 1932—20 months after passage of a "liberalizing" law extending these disability allowances for nonservice disabilities—811,492 claims had been filed under it by veterans.

As to the present ratings, anomalies abound. The widow of a man killed in action in the World War receives $30 a month. The widow of a veteran of the Civil War who is past 70 and was married prior to 1905 receives $40 a month. A dependent mother of a soldier killed in the World War receives $20 a month. A man who served a month in the Army, saw no fighting, and contracted a disease for which he was court-martialed and which, after the war, developed into total permanent disablement, may receive up to $257.50 a month—more than twelve times the amount paid to a dependent mother of a man killed in action. In a group of over 300,000 cases it was found that men disabled in action receive an average of $39 a month, whereas men disabled by disease contracted in the United States averaged $48 a month.

The cost of disability allowances and compensation is the largest single item in the expenditures so far made in respect of relief to World War veterans and their dependents. At the end of February, this year, it amounted to $2,039,490,000. Extension of these allowances on account of nonservice disabilities threatens to increase the amount in the future.

"ADJUSTED COMPENSATION"

In 1924 Congress, over President Coolidge's veto, enacted the bonus bill, but not as originally proposed. The original suggestion was that $180 should be paid in cash to every ex-service man irrespective of length of service.

The sums to be paid were computed by allowing $1.25 for each day of overseas service and $1 a day for home service. The total amount of service credit for a veteran serving overseas was limited to $625 and the total amount to be paid to a veteran with no overseas service was limited to $500. Veterans who were entitled to not more than $50 were paid in cash immediately. Those entitled to more were given "adjusted-service certificates" in the form of a 20-year endowment insurance policy. The policy, in effect, was a promise to pay at death, or in 1945, such sum in 20-year endowment as the "adjusted-service credit" increased by 25 per cent would buy according to the age of the veteran in question.

Consequently the face value of the policy of "adjusted-service certificate" was and is considerably higher than the amount of the "service credit." For instance, a 30-year-old veteran with $625 due in "service credit" would receive a policy authorizing payment, on death or in 1945, of $1,577.50. Clearly, the "bonus" in this form was a much more substantial gift than a cash payment of $180 as originally proposed.

Up to October 31, 1931, the provisions of the World War adjusted compensation act had been extended to 3,865,276 veterans, or dependents of deceased veterans. Cash payments, where certificates were not issued, amounted to $41,756,940; awards on maturity of certificates by death amounted to $114,186,950; the total face value of certificates issued amounted to $3,600,595,339.

DEMAND FOR LOANS

Under the act of 1924 Congress was authorized to put aside $112,000,000 a year for 20 years to build up a "certificate fund" which, with these contributions plus compound interest, would amount at the end of the period to about $3,500,000,000. This sum, it was intended, should be available to pay off the certificates upon maturity.

Over President Hoover's veto, Congress, in February, last year, voted to permit loans up to 50 per cent of the face value of the certificates at the rate of 4½ per cent interest. By November 28, 1931, according to the Veterans' Administration, approximately 2,500,000 veterans had borrowed a total of $1,173,330,971.37.

The entire sum accumulated for the sinking fund on which the whole certificate plan was based has already gone in loans. In addition, more than $300,000,000 of the five hundred million and odd capital reserves of the United States Government life-insurance fund, to which veteran holders of war-risk insurance look for security, have also gone in loans.

Making the loans has, in effect, involved substitution of veterans' notes for obligations of the United States. The financial bases of the adjusted-compensation scheme and of the insurance fund alike have been weakened. Furthermore, immediate cash payment of what is not due until 1945 would mean the abandonment of the original arrangement to accumulate the amount by annual contributions plus interest.

In summation: The total cost of relief to veterans and dependents has been $14,810,000,000 for all our wars. The costs of Federal and State relief to veterans and dependents of veterans of the World War now totals between seven and eight billion dollars. Between the end of the war and June 30, 1931, $946,600,000 was expended in discharge fees and vocational rehabilitation; $1,800,000,000 in compensation allowances; about $1,000,000,000 in war-risk insurance claims; and $627,000,000 went for hospitalization.

In the meantime, among other measures, the bonus plan has been put in effect, and loans totaling $1,173,000,000 have been made against an eventual face value of certificates of $3,600,000,000. Finally, in the present fiscal year, $928,000,000, or one-fourth of the Nation's expenses and actually about one-half of its income, has been appropriated for veterans' relief.

CONSEQUENCES TO THE NATION

There is complete unanimity on the proposition that men who were disabled in war service and the widows and other dependents of men who died in war service should receive some fair measure of support from the Nation. There is, on the other hand, a wide divergence of opinion regarding the justice and advisability of the much broader legislation both passed and proposed. Avoiding such controversy, we have confined ourselves to the facts. However, we think it only proper to emphasize two conclusions obviously to be drawn from such facts: First, that the cost of veterans' relief while benefiting less than 5 per cent of the people, falls, through taxation, either directly or indirectly on all of the people; and, secondly, if the movement persists at the rate now indicated, far more burdensome taxation for all may be expected to result.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE (S. REPT. NO. 964)

Mr. HEBERT, from the Select Committee on Unemployment Insurance, pursuant to Senate Resolution 483, establishing a Select Committee to Investigate Unemployment Insurance Systems (71st Cong.), submitted a report.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HOUSE REPORT NO. 2290

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, from the Committee on Printing I report back favorably a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 31), which I ask may be read, and I shall then ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). The concurrent resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 31) submitted by Mr. GLENN on the 8th instant, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of House Report No. 2290, Seventy-first Congress, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room, and 3,000 copies for the use of the House document room.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, what document is it that is involved?

Mr. MOSES. It is the so-called Fish report. A resolution was introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] for the printing of the document. The supply has been completely exhausted and there have been a great many demands for it, both upon the Senate document room and the House document room.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. How many have been printed up to this time?

Mr. MOSES. The regular number plus $200 worth. The regular number is 1,396. Then the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing is authorized always to issue an order for $200 worth more.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. How much is the cost of printing the 5,000 additional copies?

Mr. MOSES. I can not say. It is plate work, and the plates are already in existence.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thought it was customary for the Committee on Printing to get estimates.

Mr. MOSES. Yes; for the printing of the original document, not for a reprint.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the resolution go over without prejudice and I will confer with the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be passed over without prejudice.

MINING OF COAL ADJACENT TO THE ALASKA RAILROAD

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the bill (H. R. 12281) to encourage the mining of coal adjacent to the Alaska Railroad in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, has been referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs. I ask unanimous consent that that committee may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Special Select Committee to Investigate the Alaska Railroad, which was created some time ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be entered.

Mr. HOWELL subsequently, from the Special Select Committee to Investigate the Alaska Railroad, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12281) to encourage the mining of coal adjacent to the Alaska Railroad in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 965) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mr. VANDENBERG (for Mr. WATERMAN), from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on to-day, June 30, 1932, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

S. 772. An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to sell the Morton Nursery site, in the county of Cherry, State of Nebraska;

S. 1030. An act for the relief of John A. Pearce;

S. 2242. An act granting six months' pay to Louis Soluri; and

S. J. Res. 188. Joint resolution amending the joint resolution providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska, approved June 6, 1932.

TEMPORARY AID TO AGRICULTURE

Pursuant to permission previously granted, Mr. NORBECK (late in the evening of June 29, 1932) introduced a bill (S. 4940) to provide temporary aid to agriculture for the relief of the existing national economic emergency, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 4941) to amend the act to exclude and expel from the United States political refugees, approved October 16, 1918, as amended by the act approved June 5, 1920; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 4942) granting an increase of pension to Alice Hamilton (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4943) granting an increase of pension to Mary P. Noble (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

PER DIEM COMPENSATION AT GENEVA CONFERENCE, ETC.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a joint resolution. It seems that sections 207, 208, and 803, Part II, of the act making appropriation for the legislative branch of the Government, limited all per diems of parties employed by the Government abroad to $6 a day. The Secretary of State has sent me a joint resolution modifying that provision so far as the Geneva conference and the coming radio convention are concerned. It appears that arrangements were made with certain individuals who are now in attendance upon the Geneva conference and who will be in attendance upon the radio convention, in which certain per diems were agreed upon, and I introduce a joint resolution, therefore, providing that the terms of the act be modified so as not to include those in attendance upon the two conventions referred to.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 190) concerning the expenses of participation by the United States in the General Disarmament Conference at Geneva and in the International Radiotelegraph Conference at Madrid was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of sections 207, 208, and 803 of Part II of the act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, shall not be applicable to the appropriations made for participation by the United States in the general disarmament conference in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1932, nor in the conference for the revision of the international radiotelegraph convention of November 25, 1927, to be held in Madrid, Spain.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator tell us how much we have appropriated for the Geneva conference?

Mr. BORAH. I do not recall the amount, but I recall it was a large sum.

Mr. JOHNSON. The junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], sitting in front of me, suggests that it was about $500,000. I think we can conclude, if it was $500,000, which I do not think is entirely the fact, that $499,000 has been wasted.

Mr. BORAH. I will not debate that question with the Senator until after the conference ends.

Mr. BORAH subsequently said: Mr. President, this morning I introduced a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 190). Since that time I have polled the Committee on Foreign Relations, all those who are available, and I now report back the joint resolution favorably and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the joint resolution be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, before the joint resolution is reported I wish to say that I support the request of the Senator from Idaho.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the Senator should make a brief explanation of the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. I made an explanation this morning. The appropriation bill to which this refers limits the per diems to $6 for those who are engaged in the affairs of the Government, such as the commissions which are mentioned in the joint resolution. I have a letter from the Secretary of State stating that the conditions under which those people accepted appointments on the commission would make it practically a violation of the obligation of the Government as it was entered into. I ask to have the letter inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 28, 1932.

The Hon. W. L. JONES,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR JONES: Under date of June 21, 1932, I wrote you proposing an amendment to the pending deficiency bill, to read somewhat as follows:

"The provisions of sections 207, 208, and 803 of part 2 of the act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, shall not be applicable to the appropriations made for participation by the United States in the General Disarmament Conference in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1932."

You will doubtless recall that this suggestion was made in order that the members of the American delegation now present at the General Disarmament Conference at Geneva might continue to receive per diem in lieu of subsistence at the rates which have been paid them since the opening of the conference. I pointed out that the reduction of all per diems of the delegation to $6, as provided for in the bill making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government (H. R. 11267, pt. 2), would subject the members of the delegation to serious loss and would be bound to work grave injustice.

I am now informed by Mr. Carr, Assistant Secretary of State, that at a hearing before your committee yesterday morning a similar question was raised with reference to the restriction of the rates of per diem for the International Radiotelegraph Conference, which will open at Madrid on September 3, 1932. I believe that Mr. Carr told you how difficult, if not impossible, it is for us to secure the services of the experts whom we need at this conference if they are to be limited to a per diem of $6, and in such case inevitably called upon to spend extensively of their own funds.

I understand that you requested that the department submit to you a draft of a joint resolution which would exempt the American delegations to both these conferences from the restrictions as to per diem to which I have referred above.

It is a pleasure for me, in compliance with your request, to inclose a draft of a joint resolution intended to carry out this purpose. I wish in this connection to point out that the enactment of the resolution would not require any increase whatsoever in appropriations but would merely make possible the utilization of available funds in a manner calculated to fulfill efficiently the very purposes for which these funds were appropriated.

Sincerely yours,

H. L. STIMSON.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I say that this grows out of the economy bill which we passed, which limits the per diems of foreign representatives to $6 a day. It was not intended to affect commissions like those referred to in the resolution, but only the ordinary per diems for our agents or representatives in foreign countries. I think it but fair and proper that the resolution should be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 190) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE BILL—DUTY ON BUTTONS OF PEARL OR SHELL, ETC.

Mr. DICKINSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7233, the Philippine independence bill, which was read, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. DICKINSON to the bill (H. R. 7233), page 28, line 17, insert new section as follows:

"There shall be levied, collected, and paid on all buttons of pearl or shell, finished or partly finished, and on all pearl or shell button blanks, not turned, faced, or drilled, coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands in any calendar year in excess of a collective total of 800,000 gross of all such articles hereinbefore enumerated, the same rates of duty which are required by the laws of the United States to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries."

SPECIAL SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ALASKA RAILROAD

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution. I ask that it may be read and I shall then ask consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be received and read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 257), as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 298, agreed to July 1, 1930, and continued by resolution of January 16, 1931, authorizing a special committee to investigate the operations, economic situation, and prospects of the Alaska Railroad, hereby is continued in full force and effect until December 4, 1933.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

MIGRATORY BIRD CONSERVATION

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar 783, the bill (S. 4726) to supplement the migratory bird conservation act by providing funds for the acquisition of areas for use as migratory bird sanctuaries, refuges, and breeding grounds, for developing and administering such areas, for the protection of certain migratory birds, for the enforcement of the migratory bird treaty act and regulations thereunder, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAINE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill, H. R. 7233, to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I do not care to repeat my explanation of the pending amendment other than to inform the Senate in a sentence or two as to its purpose. Under the plan of economic preparation submitted in the pending Hawes-Cutting bill there is a period of 10 years in which there is no attempt made to reduce the amount of Philippine exports into our free market. The entire process of progressive economic preparation under the pending Hawes-Cutting bill is confined to the final five years of the 15-year period. I am submitting an amendment to the Senate on the theory that if that economic preparation is to be adequately undertaken in serious earnestness, and with an actual purpose to accomplish economic self-sufficiency, the process should start sooner than 10 years, and the pending amendment proposes to start it in 5 years.

From the viewpoint of those American interests which are primarily concerned in a defense of American markets against what they believe to be the hazard of Philippine imports, the standpoint of these particular interests having been highly stressed by the authors of this measure, I submit that the pending amendment makes the Hawes-Cutting bill more acceptable rather than less so. That, however, is not the motivating purpose behind its submission, so far as I am concerned. My purpose is to make this period of economic preparation livable for the Filipinos themselves and at the same time sufficiently practical in all its economic phases to produce an actual net result at the end of the period which through economic self-sufficiency will permit successful independence at that time.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that under the terms of the pending bill the ultimate restriction upon Filipino exports into the free market of the United States becomes only 25 per cent of our existing tariff rates. In other words, the transition at the end of the 15-year period or the 16 or 17 year period, as it may happen to develop—the native transition at that final moment is from an inhibition of 25 per cent to an inhibition of 100 per cent; in other words, the jump in the finale of this program is from a prohibition against 25 per cent of our free market to a prohibition against 100 per cent of our free market.

I submit, Mr. President, that this final 75 per cent jump—sudden, summary, at the very moment when this new republic is undertaking to establish itself and is beset by a multitude of burdens and other responsibilities—is an unlivable change for which preparation is entirely inadequate, and that, from the point of view of the Philippine experiment itself, it is far better that this progressive economic preparation should come nearer to a simulation of the same conditions which must be subsequently confronted under their own free flag. Therefore, Mr. President, I submit the amendment as indicated.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan just what the last line of this proposed amendment means. It is easy to understand the first four lines, which read:

During the sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth years after the inauguration of the new government, the commodity exemptions defined in subsections a, b, c, d, and e of this section shall be reduced 25 per cent.

And then the amendment provides that:

The rates of duty shall be administered on this basis.

What rates of duty?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The rates of duty which apply to commodities in excess of the exemptions. The language is precisely the language which is used in the preceding section.

Mr. BINGHAM. The amendment reported by the committee reads:

During the eleventh year after the inauguration of the new government the export tax shall be 5 per cent of the rates of duty—

Does the exemption which the Senator has provided extend to the eleventh year, the twelfth year, and so forth?

Mr. VANDENBERG. It does.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the Senator. In other words, Mr. President, what this amendment proposes to do is to change the theory established in the bill as reported from the committee, which gives a period of some 10 years for economic adjustment during which we fix the amount of free imports practically at quantity now being imported. The amendment changes that theory, and after five years the exemptions are cut down by 25 per cent. The amendment is based on a very different theory than that on which the bill is constructed, and, therefore, I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

If the Senator had proposed a sliding scale of duties, so that the squeeze would come gradually, it would be more in line with the theory which he himself has advocated; but after five years he jumps it immediately and reduces the amount of the free imports by 25 per cent and continues that percentage for the next five years.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I quite agree with the Senator that the theory of this amendment is not in complete harmony with a program for continuous, progressive, and regular Filipino export reductions. That theory, however, is submitted completely and with mathematical correctness in my substitute. I found it impossible to raise that question in respect to the text of the bill itself, except in the fashion I have here indicated, unless I undertook to rewrite the bill entirely.

Mr. BINGHAM. I wish the Senator would submit his substitute and permit us to vote on it, instead of tinkering with the bill, which the committee in very full sessions and after long study finally put into shape. However, I will refrain from making any further remarks, Mr. President, hoping that the amendment may be submitted and may be defeated.

Mr. HAWES obtained the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri permit me to make just one observation in response to the last remark of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HAWES. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I would be quite satisfied to submit the entire issue upon my substitute alone, as is indicated would be the preferable course from the viewpoint of the Senator from Connecticut, if it were not for the fact that I have no illusions respecting the ultimate fate of that substitute. The Senator from Missouri himself has repeatedly advised the Senate of the overwhelming majority which is awaiting the roll call upon the bill as it now stands. Therefore, since I conscientiously believe that the bill as it now stands can and most emphatically should be improved, even though it can not be brought to the full measure of my own approval, it seems to me that it is my duty to undertake these corrections, or at least to give the Senate an opportunity to pass upon them. I thank the Senator from Missouri for his courtesy.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, it is impossible to pass upon these amendments submitted by the Senator from Michigan one at a time; and I think it is desirable that the Senate should know something about the history of the bill now before it.

The amendment to the bill before the Senate, H. R. 7233, was prepared for the committee after long hearings by the Legislative Counsel of the Senate. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] discussed before the committee everything that he is now discussing before the Senate, and he stood absolutely alone. He was the only one of the 15 members of the committee who advocated a plan which is impossible of execution and which is unconstitutional.

That bill, in my opinion, is a legislative monstrosity. I call the attention of Senators to it. It proposes that the Filipino people must put burdens upon their backs at certain periods, and if they fail to add to their tax burdens they may not have independence.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HAWES. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The Senator spoke of the bill as being a monstrosity. I hope he did not have reference to the bill which is now under consideration.

Mr. HAWES. I have reference to the Vandenberg substitute.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I thought the Senator had reference to the substitute.

Mr. HAWES. Let us see the difference. The substitute is designed to defeat independence. I am suspicious of the bill because I believe its inspiration came from the Insular Affairs Bureau of the War Department. See what it does:

There are five different ways in the bill to prevent independence. It proposes, if the Filipino legislature during the fifth year shall fail to petition for a decrease in the amount of duty-free sugar, coconut oil, and cordage they shall lose their independence.

The customary way of passing a law is for Congress to act, either for a measure or against a measure; but the proposal of the Senator from Michigan is that the law is not complete until the Legislature of the Philippines acts. It is not Congress putting on a tariff duty each five years. It proposes that the Legislature of the Philippine Islands each five years shall approve or disapprove of an increase in duty.

I know of no similar act of Congress where a foreign nation or a dependency, by its veto power or its approval, in effect enacts a law for the Congress.

It is a brutal thing to do to say to the people of the Philippines by this bill, "In this year you must vote for a tariff duty, and if you do not vote to put a burden upon yourselves, you may not have your independence," and then wait another period of five years and again ask the Philippine Legislature to impose an additional burden upon the Filipino people, and each time the legislature is told that if it does not do this thing the islands lose their independence. Think of the turmoil, the confusion, the uncertainty, both in the Philippines and in the United States, while this process of determination is going on in the Philippines—not in the Congress of the United States but in the Legislature of the Philippines.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HAWES. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is it true, I ask the Senator from Missouri, that the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs held various meetings which were always well attended; that practically all the members of the committee were present from both sides of the Chamber, and various portions of the bill, section by section, were carefully discussed; that everybody was permitted to have his say; that the various matters that are now sought to be interpolated as amendments were before that committee and were thoroughly argued, the best arguments available being brought to bear on each and every one, pro and con; that after the fullest discussion all of the matter contained in the so-called Vandenberg substitute was discarded, and the bill as it now appears before the Senate as a substitute for the House bill represents the unanimous opinion of the members of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs on both sides of the Chamber save only the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who desires immediate independence?

Is not that true? The question is a rather long one, but I ask the Senator if it is not true.

Mr. HAWES. The Senator is entirely right. Not only did we have a full attendance, but every feature of this bill was discussed. That very distinguished and able young lawyer, Mr. Boots, of the Legislative Counsel's office, when we had interpreted a section, revised it, and we considered it over and over again.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAWES. Just a second. Not only is that so, but there was not a single member who favored what might be called Senator VANDENBERG's substitute, and the legal question was raised in the committee that the Congress of the United States can not delegate to the Legislature of the Philippines the enactment of laws for the American Congress. That is the reason why I was interested to inquire whether this bill had ever been submitted to the legislative counsel of the Senate, and I found that it was not.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HAWES. I yield.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The Senator is quite correct in saying that so far as my attitude is concerned—because I am included when reference is made to every member of the committee—I voted against the Vandenberg substitute; but I think the statement made by the Senator from Indiana does not accurately describe my action with reference to the length of time intervening before independence, and the limitation on importations to this country, and in regard to the duties imposed under this bill. I objected to all three of those matters and stated to the committee that I would take them to the floor, and that was understood. I think the Senator from Missouri will bear me out on that.

Mr. HAWES. The Senator from Louisiana is correct. Since we are getting into the matter of the committee, I will say that the committee took up the element of time and voted, as I recollect, upon three periods. The first was the period suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] of 4 years; then the suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] of 5 years, and then the suggestion of 10 years. The bill of the Senator from Michigan was for 20 years; and on a roll call, as I recollect, there were only 3 votes in the committee opposed to the 15-year period and none in favor of the proposal of the Senator from Michigan of 20 years.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President—

Mr. HAWES. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Just this further interruption: I think there is no question but that all the Senator says is true. I do not think anybody expects any of these various amendments to be adopted by the Senate. Without suggesting any evil motive on the part of any Member of the Senate—I would not go into that, or question any Senator's motives—I do not think there is any expectation on the part of any Member of the Senate that any of these amendments will be adopted by the Senate. That being true, in the closing days of the session, when we are about to adjourn, one naturally imagines that the reason for their being discussed at length and interjected at this time would be to make impossible the passage of the bill.

Mr. HAWES. I will say to the Senator that in my opinion that is obvious.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Exactly; and to force the bill over to December. In other words, those proposing the amendments evidently are not very anxious for Philippine independence under any circumstances; but we shall have to take the situation as it arises and face it as it comes, and sooner or later the bill will be passed. I think the best bill that we can pass is the bill that has been submitted by the eminent Senator from Missouri, Mr. HAWES, and his equally eminent colleague from New Mexico, Mr. CUTTING.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HAWES. I yield to the Senator; but I should like to express my very deep regret that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], the coauthor of this bill, is ill and can not be here.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I rise merely to make an inquiry.

In view of what has been said as to action taken by the committee, as the bill now appears, how long will it be before independence will come to the Philippine people?

Mr. HAWES. Does the Senator mean under the Vandenberg bill?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Assuming that the provisions are complied with or carried out, how long will it be? Will we all be dead? How long will it be? I ask, not to provoke controversy, but I merely wanted that stated.

Mr. HAWES. The House bill—that is the best way to compare this—and the Senate bill run for a period of years with a limitation of output in which the committee has tried to arrive at the status quo. The House bill gives independence in eight years.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Eight years from the passage of the act?

Mr. HAWES. Yes; and the adoption of a constitution by the Philippine people.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Assuming that they carry out the provisions of the House bill, eight years would intervene before independence?

Mr. HAWES. That is right. In the Senate bill we have made the period of limitation 10 years, and at the expiration of 10 years a tariff duty begins and runs for 5 years.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Pardon me if I make that clear. So that from the passage of the act, for 10 years, the tariff does not apply.

Mr. HAWES. But a limitation takes effect immediately.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; and then after the 10-year period, a 5-year period follows. What, in regard to tariff legislation, as to that later period?

Mr. HAWES. The duty begins each year and is increased each year for the 5-year period.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I just add this thought: Personally for many years I have favored the independence of the Philippine people, and my present regret is that a bill could not have been framed and enacted to give them complete independence within, say, 1, 2, 3, or 4 years. My great regret is that the bill does not give earlier independence to the Filipino people.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan indicated that some uncertainty would be produced because of this apparent change each year in five years. The philosophy of this bill is that it sets out definitely 10 years in advance what will happen in each of these five years. The proposal of the Senator from Michigan is not certain and clear as that and makes it all dependent upon the act of the Legislature of the Philippines and not upon the act of the Congress of the United States. There is no possible way of understanding the series of six amendments; it can not be done, unless they are all considered at the same time. The Senator from Michigan has a bill, a substitute bill, which embodies his philosophy, his thought on the subject. Why can he not let his substitute come before the Senate and let the Senate decide whether they want it or not, not in sections, not in dribbles, not in six amendments, but in one document, so that the whole philosophy of that bill may be understood? When it is understood, I venture the assertion that it will be decided, as the Senator said, adversely.

Why he should bring in six different amendments, when all of this matter is covered in one substitute, is something that I can not understand.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And, may I add, was thoroughly discussed before the committee with the full membership present.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the discussion we have heard on this bill this morning, it now being 12.50 o'clock p. m., makes it plain and it must be evident that this is not a Philippine independence bill we are discussing. This bill and all of its amendments can not give any encouragement and consolation to the Filipinos. There is nothing back of these measures except sordid selfishness. We are seeking to protect the sugar interests and the oil interests and the lumber interests and the cotton interests. We want to put a tariff on hemp and on other products coming from the Philippines. We are not interested in the independence of the Filipinos. We are interested in the financial and selfish economic interests of the United States.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. That might be the opinion of the Senator from New York, but I do not wish to sit here, even at the expense of aiding him in his address, and be committed to that.

I assure the Senator that the committee, and every member of the committee, including the Senator from Michigan, gave as much consideration to the welfare of the Filipino people as they did to the welfare of the American people. While there was a difference of opinion as to methods, I wish, in defense of the committee, to state that that sentiment did move them all the way through.

I call attention to the fact that there are two interests to be conserved. One of them is the interest of the Filipinos, to whom we are under obligation by reason of our trusteeship, and the other is the interest of our own citizens. We have tried to meet both.

When this bill attempts to reduce the immigration from the Philippine Islands it can not be called a selfish proposition, because there is a great migration from the Philippine Islands at a time, I will say to the Senator, when we have more laborers in this country than we need, at a time when there are probably 10,000,000 idle people here.

Mr. COPELAND. May I interrupt the Senator there? When does the Senator propose stopping the migration of the Filipinos to the United States?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say to the Senator that, in my opinion, and I believe in the opinion of nearly all of the committee, it could not be accomplished while the Filipinos are under the sovereignty of the United States, except by their consent and approval.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me interrupt the Senator again. As a distinguished Democrat, as a member of the party which will take control of the Government next year, does the Senator believe that our party is so impotent that it can not reestablish the economic prosperity within the period of 15 years?

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. COPELAND. It might well be, then, that we might have a place for some Filipinos and for some other people when we have economic prosperity.

Mr. PITTMAN. That may be true, and I think it will be, but we are dealing right now with a great many emergencies; and Congress, time and time again, have shown that they will not tolerate the imposition of restrictions on a people whom we dominate, who are under our sovereignty, without their consent or approval.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, if I may ask the question, is this an immigration restriction bill? Are we going to alienate sovereignty over the Philippines so as to keep the Filipinos out and prevent them from coming in as immigrants? If so, why do we wait 15 years? We have an economic depression now.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator had been on the committee instead of writing a treatise on law, he would have known our viewpoint.

Mr. COPELAND. If the committee had given some thought to the law instead of writing theses on immigration restriction, I think perhaps we might have made more progress.

Mr. PITTMAN. We were unfortunate in not having a doctor on the committee.

I do not wish to criticize the position taken by the Senator from New York with regard to the constitutional question, but I simply wanted to rise to state that it is not a selfish question in the narrow sense of that word. All questions are selfish, of course, in a sense. Our committee have tried to protect the interests of both sides as fairly as we could. We know that the Congress of the United States are not going to subject any people we dominate, under our sovereignty, to the restrictions of our tariff laws or our immigration laws. That has been demonstrated.

The argument that we could not suddenly throw the Filipinos on their own absolute independence was appreciated not only by every member of the committee but also by the representatives of the Filipino people themselves. Therefore we had the two problems to face, our duty to the Filipino people, in the first place, and in the second place, our duty to our own citizens.

The Filipino people recognized the fact that under the conditions of unemployment in this country, which may last for a long time, it was injurious to us to have an influx of people from their country. As I have said, they agreed to the restriction of 100 a year from the very time we give them autonomous government, and they did it gladly. That is the only way we can get it that is honorable. They also agreed to another thing, I will say to the Senator. Knowing that the Congress would not impose any restrictions on their commerce as long as they were under our domination, but realizing the situation, they agreed that they would not increase their exports to this country of the three major products, and that on all of the natural increase of the production of the Philippine Islands they would pay our rates of tariff.

They went further than that; they agreed that on all in excess of a certain status quo of exportation to this country they would put an export tax equal to our duty, and put that in a special fund to pay off their bonds, so that our moral responsibility, if not legal, would be met.

They not only did that, but while they agreed to the restrictions on themselves in the payment of tariffs above the quota, they agreed to let all of our exports to the Philippine Islands go in free during the whole time until independence was finally granted. So I say that while there was selfishness in this such as every man has, it was a very modulated selfishness in which we tried to meet the wishes of both sides.

The committee gave most careful and serious attention and consideration to the matter. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM], chairman of the committee, and I agree with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES], one of the authors of the bill, that there is only one question here and that is the theory and the thought suggested by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the theory and the thought suggested by the committee. We can not frame the bill here on the floor of the Senate by cutting down on days and months and years in this section and on the amount of exports and imports. We have spent a long time considering those matters. Those in favor of the theory of the Senator from Michigan ought to vote against the bill. Those in favor of the theory of the bill ought to vote down every amendment because they have got to trust to the working out of the matter by the committee, and then let the issue come squarely between the two theories.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The feature of this bill about which I have thought most is the length of time elapsing between the passage of the bill and independence. Sometime, though I do not care to trespass upon the time of the Senator from New York now, I would like to have an expression of view by the Senator from Nevada as to why it is necessary to extend the time over such a long period.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be very glad to yield the floor for that purpose now.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I would rather we come to a vote on the amendment and get that matter cleared up first. Let us get it down to a direct issue between the two views. I think we will not have any undue delay. I would be very happy to explain to the Senator from Idaho and others the reasons which actuated us, and then he can use his own judgment as to the weight to be attached to our reasons.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada made rather a facetious reference to the lack of a doctor. I can not readily find the reference in the Bible, but there is something there about things being revealed unto babes and not given to the wise. I am hiding behind the Scripture in the position which I take about it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course, I can not answer that. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. My friend from Nevada has given emphasis to what I have been saying about the pending measure. Yesterday the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] spoke about the three farm organizations and the American Federation of Labor and certain great commercial interests favoring the bill. Why do they favor the bill? They favor it, of course, because their particular selfish interests will be served by the passage of the bill. I can not understand why my friends in the Philippines—some of them, not all of them—are so eager for this legislation. It would seem to me that if they would study the certain effect which this new relationship will have upon their commercial and social welfare, they would not be so eager for it.

As I said yesterday, and I repeat it to-day, if the sovereign people of the United States are willing to relinquish sovereignty over the Philippines, and indicate that willingness in due and ancient form by a constitutional amendment, I would join in any movement which gives honest-to-goodness freedom to the Filipinos. We are talking about a period of 15 or 20 years or some other number of years. Either the Filipinos should have independence or they should not. If they are ready for independence, and say they are, then the desire that lives in my heart that there shall be local self-determination would cause me to say, "All right. God bless you! Here are the thousand islands. They are yours. Do with them as you like." But we are not here to-day talking about the liberty and the freedom of the Filipinos, those aspirations which are native to every heart. We are not talking about those things. We are proposing some scheme by which we may impose tariffs upon the products of the Philippine Islands, and in that way increase the prosperity and economic welfare of commercial and industrial and agricultural interests in the United States. That is what we are doing.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROOKHART in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to make just a brief comment and place in the RECORD an article to which I am going to refer. Will the Senator from New York yield for that purpose?

Mr. COPELAND. I am glad to yield.

FEDERAL TAX LEVY ON STATES AND THEIR AGENCIES

Mr. NORRIS. In the revenue act which we recently passed all Senators will remember that we levied a tax upon electricity manufactured by municipally owned plants, providing that the municipality shall collect the tax. We all know, and so I am not trying to repeat, the story of the action that was first taken by the Senate, levying a tax on privately owned corporations manufacturing and distributing electricity, and that in that condition the bill went to conference and when the conferees brought it back it contained an entirely different provision.

Mr. C. R. Reid, of California, has written an interesting article in which he submits an argument as to the constitutionality of that act, arguing that it is a law taxing a subdivision of the State. He quotes, among other things, from McCulloch against Maryland, the famous opinion rendered by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall. I want to read that quotation. Chief Justice Marshall said:

It is admitted that there is no express provision in the Constitution that prohibits the Federal Government from taxing the means and instrumentalities of the State, nor is there any prohibiting these States from taxing the means and instrumentalities of that Government. In both cases the exemption rests upon necessary implication and is upheld by the great law of self-preservation: As any government whose means employed in conducting its operations, if subject to the control of another and distinct government can exist only at the mercy of that government. Of what avail are these means if another power may tax them at discretion?

Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the entire article of Mr. Reid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

By C. R. Reid

If certain provisions of the revenue act of 1932 recently passed by Congress are upheld it will establish a precedent which tends to wreck all of our municipal parks, playgrounds, swimming pools, electric plants, gas plants, steam plants, street railways, hospitals, irrigation districts, reclamation districts, airports, sewage and garbage systems, water systems, etc.; in short, every State and the United States.

If you followed the enactment of the revenue act of 1932 through Congress you are aware that two electric energy amendments taxing consumers were defeated, which identical proposition was advanced in the conference managers' group.

You probably will be advised, although it was conceded by proponents of the various measures that Congress could not levy a tax on municipalities or political subdivisions, that the Treasury Department is going to try forcing political subdivisions to pay the tax by the subterfuge of requiring that you as a vendor collect the tax for them. The Federal Government is going to try demanding that you, a regularly constituted political subdivision of a State, devote your time and money to act as a collection agency for them by taxing the owners of your enterprise 3 per cent on their electric bill, thereafter transmitting the proceeds to the Federal Government. It might be said at this point that the Budget was theoretically balanced as it left the Senate without the electric energy consumers' provision, which tax collects $11,000,000 less than the amendment passed by the Senate. Was this a patriotic measure to unbalance the Budget?

Twenty-five delegates of our larger California cities, consisting of city managers, city attorneys, and other city officials, as representative delegates at a regularly called meeting on June 22, 1932, passed the following resolution:

"It was regularly moved, seconded, and unanimously carried that the delegates here assembled do vigorously protest against the taxing of States, municipalities, and publicly owned public utilities and do suggest to our governing boards, concerted action to study the cost and proper method of opposing the tax on constitutional grounds."

Numbers of suggestions were offered at this meeting. A few follow:

It was suggested that no tax be paid to the Federal Government or no tax be collected for the Federal Government by any municipal enterprise or by any political subdivision.

It was also suggested that political subdivisions do not concede the Internal Revenue Bureau anything unless they make their claims or demands in writing; and if you believe you must comply with the demand, to do so only under written protest.

It was also suggested that no sales tax be paid by a State or one of its agencies on any article at any time.

It was suggested that if the Internal Revenue Bureau insists on payment of the sales or excise taxes or the collection of tax by States or their agencies, that every State and/or their agency have a citizen enjoin said State or State agency from expending public funds for the required labor, material, time, and money involved.

It was also suggested that if the injunction was removed, that these States and agencies levy the same tax claimed by the United States against said Federal Government and the funds be impounded upon Federal court authority until an agreement has been reached by concerted action and not by individual State agencies, because it was believed that if the United States has the power to tax States and State agencies, the States and their agencies have the same power to tax the United States.

The duties of our public officials are prescribed by charter or other legislative action. It is not believed their present bond will cover or the Federal Government has the authority to delegate our elected officials as deputy collectors of Internal Revenue to be paid out of our public funds. This will necessitate a tax being levied by the State agencies for the necessary labor, material, time, and money involved to pay a tax to the Federal Government. The cost of making the accounting installation was averaged at approximately 7 cents per customer, thereby requiring our larger municipal enterprises to expend several thousand dollars per year to collect the tax.

To the other taxpayers that may be forced to pay the tax, do not forget that the act says "electrical energy." This does not mean that the Treasury Department should interpret it to include the so-called stand-by charge of fifty or more cents per month which you pay for maintenance, reading, up-keep, etc. Therefore, this should be deducted from the bill before the tax is computed.

The municipal plants that are supplying electricity to their owners have come into existence almost entirely because of a desire to lower rates or on account of inadequate service. These projects passed beyond the "proprietary" capacity or limit into a "governmental" function. Practically all of these larger projects have been forced on the municipalities on account of inadequacy of capital, thereby requiring the public to vote a tax levy on their property to furnish funds for either the construction or acquisition and the maintenance of whatever it may have been required when the emergency presented itself. If we shut our eyes altogether, we can revert to the time when the collecting of taxes themselves was a "proprietary" function. The Government let the collection of them out to the highest bidder until this duty progressed beyond the scope of a "proprietary" function. Perhaps the Government can explain why they thought it necessary to take over the "proprietary" express business in the postal department and call it "governmental" parcel post, or the banking business and call it "Federal reserve," both functions which had theretofore been so-called "proprietary." Municipal plants are cooperative institutions. There is no individual profit. The municipality owns the plant, manufactures electricity, and they, the owners, pay the manufacturing cost. Congress has heretofore exempted cooperative associations where no individual makes a profit. Has it reversed this practice?

A home owner generating electricity for his own needs is exempt from taxation. A municipally owned system supplying itself with electricity is a group of home owners generating electricity for their own requirements with no individual profit. Is there a reason why the group and not the individual should pay the Federal Government a fee for the electricity they themselves consume?

It is the opinion of the writer that this provision of the revenue act of 1932 is unconstitutional, because the "power of policy dictation" or the "right of States or their agencies to administer their own affairs" or the "demand by the Federal Government that the public funds be expended" is a usurpation of power which alleged unconstitutionality is dovetailed in the same lack or avoidance of power of the Federal Government to tax a State or the State agency thereof.

A few decisions follow setting forth the principle which the writer contends:

Chief Justice John Marshall, of the United States Supreme Court, held that the United States did not have the power to tax individual States or the agencies of the States. (McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316.) The Supreme Court said:

"It is admitted that there is no express provision in the Constitution that prohibits the Federal Government from taxing the means and instrumentalities of the State, nor is there any prohibiting these States from taxing the means and instrumentalities of that Government. In both cases the exemption rests upon necessary implication and is upheld by the great law of self-preservation: As any government, whose means employed in conducting its operations, is subject to the control of another and distinct government can exist only at the mercy of that government. Of what avail are these means if another power may tax them at discretion?"

In the case of Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S. 584) Mr. Justice Fields said:

"The right of States to administer their own affairs through their legislative, executive, and judicial departments, in their own manner through their own agencies is conceded by the uniform decision of this court, and by the Federal Government from its organization. This carries with it an exemption of those agencies and instruments from the taxing power of the Federal Government. If they may be taxed lightly, they may be taxed heavily; if justly, oppressively, their operation may be impeded and destroyed if interference is permitted. Hence the beginning of such taxation is not allowed on the one side and is not claimed on the other."

The writer is of the opinion that by the foregoing decision, if we permit the Federal Government "the power of dictation or interference" in this instance, we grant a precedent that has never before been asked. You have been shown that it was not for the purpose of "balancing the Budget," then why was it inserted and for what purpose? If we wish to open the way for destruction of our Federal Government, allow the individual States the power to tax the national instrumentalities; and if we give the Federal Government the "power of interference," we are undermining our Federal system of Government and sacrificing our liberties to vicious legislation.

The Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, now Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, said in his message on Federal taxation to the Legislature of the State of New York on June 5, 1910:

"While we may desire that the Federal Government may be equipped with all necessary national powers in order that it may perform its national function, we must be equally solicitous to secure the essential basis of State government."

The following quotations are from persons questioning this portion of the act:

Senator ROBINSON of Indiana said: "It is unquestionably wrong. The Senate has decided on two successive votes that it was wrong; and finally on the third vote decided definitely that the (private) vendor must pay this tax. The bill (10236) should be sent back again for further action, and this tax should be assessed and placed right where it belongs, and where the Senate decided it should be placed. I think the whole thing is an outrage which ought to be corrected."

Senator HOWELL, of Nebraska, said: "The Senate specifically excluded from taxation energy supplied by publicly owned power plants. The provision adopted by the conferees provides for the taxation of the consumption of publicly owned power plants. Nothing of the kind was contemplated by the Senate. It was not contemplated by either House."

Senator DILL, of Washington, said: "I want to explain briefly why I shall vote against the conference report. I do so as a protest against the action of the conferees in relation to the tax on electricity. I think it is the most indefensible thing that has been done by conferees for the Senate in many years. . . . I will not be a party to such action. The Senate voted against this provision twice as it is now written."

Senator THOMAS J. WALSH of Montana, regarded by many as one of the ablest constitutional lawyers in the Senate, said of this electric-energy amendment: "It is unconstitutional and unenforceable, for this reason: That in the case of a municipally owned plant by this provision the committee undertakes to force the municipality to collect this tax of the consumer, a thing which the Congress of the United States can not possibly do. The Congress of the United States can not impose a duty upon municipalities, a subdivision of a State government, any more than it could impose a duty of that character upon the State government."

Attorneys representing political subdivisions other than electrical energy stated: "While at present the attempt is merely made to make the State agency collect from the consumer a tax on electricity, if it can be done by a public body selling electricity, it likewise could be done by a public body dealing in other commodities which, at the present time, have passed from 'proprietary' to 'governmental' function. We are therefore directly interested in the principle involved."

Previous tax bills have been greatly improved between the time of passage and their delivery for the President's signature. Many objectionable and unlawful provisions thus became known and were eliminated. Provisions not fully considered were more carefully drawn. The people of the United States should not overlook the fact that our Government is supposed to consist of three branches—executive, legislative, and judicial—to act as a check upon one another. When our tax laws are being framed by our legislative department the people who pay the taxes should have the same permission to be represented by competent tax counsel as other interests or the executive department, which privilege was previously conceded to all but those who pay the taxes.

The writer contends that once this vicious precedent of levying a tax upon States and their agencies is established, every activity excepting those under the Federal Government will be scuttled. Why is it now proposed that discretion be cast to the four winds by the nullification of our dual system of government? Who is it that is now advocating the disruption of the States and their agencies?

It may be that an honest error has been made. However, let the people of the United States demand a rectification so that there will be no mistake in the administration of the law. The people of the United States must have two amendments immediately. The first one stating in no uncertain terms that in the enforcement of the revenue act of 1932 the Federal Government shall not impose any taxation obligation upon any State or Territory or political subdivision thereof or the District of Columbia or the officers or the employees of the aforesaid. The second amendment, a definition absolutely necessary, is that the term "political subdivision" be inclusive of any of the States or State agencies for the purpose of constructing or operating any public utilities. If there is no amendment, it will cause municipalities endless expensive litigation. Furthermore, if there is to be litigation, it should be by concerted action.

The foregoing decision has been reached by separate, independent investigations of several groups of State agencies and their legal staff.

Mr. COPELAND. May I say to my friend from Nebraska that if they had any electric power in the Philippines there would be no trouble at all about getting an ample tax upon it in order that it might be transmitted into the United States. It is too bad he can not add that as an amendment to the pending bill.

DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT-OWNED WHEAT AND COTTON

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to enable me to present a conference report? If it leads to any debate, I shall withdraw it.

Mr. COPELAND. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Oregon for that purpose.

Mr. McNARY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 418) authorizing the distribution of Government-owned wheat and cotton to the American National Red Cross and other organizations for relief of distress, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the Federal Farm Board is authorized and directed to take such action as may be necessary to deliver to the American National Red Cross, and any other organization designated by the American National Red Cross, on July 1, 1932, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, 45,000,000 bushels of wheat of the Grain Stabilization Corporation and 500,000 bales of cotton of the Cotton Stabilization Corporation, for use in providing food, cloth, and wearing apparel for the needy and distressed people, and in providing feed for livestock in the 1932 crop-failure areas, after the needs of human consumption have been taken care of, in the opinion of the director of the Red Cross, of the United States and Territories. Such wheat or cotton shall be delivered upon application therefor, but only upon the approval of the President of the United States, and in such amounts to each organization as the President may approve.

"Sec. 2. No part of the expenses incident to the delivery, receipt, and distribution of such wheat or cotton shall be borne by the United States or the Federal Farm Board. In order to carry out the purposes of this resolution such wheat or the products thereof may be milled or processed into, or exchanged for, flour of any kind, bread, or food, provided, in making such exchange, preference shall be given whenever practicable to foods of which wheat products are a substantial ingredient, or cotton may be manufactured into or exchanged for cloth, or wearing apparel, or other articles of clothing, made of cotton; but such milling, processing, or manufacturing shall be without profit to any mill, organization, or other person.

"Sec. 3. In so far as wheat or cotton is donated to relief agencies by the Grain Stabilization Corporation or the Cotton Stabilization Corporation under this resolution the Federal Farm Board is authorized to cancel such part of its loans to such corporation as equals the proportionate part of said loans represented by the wheat or cotton delivered hereunder, less the current market value of the wheat or cotton delivered; and to deduct the amount of such loans canceled from the amount of the revolving fund established by the agricultural marketing act. To carry out the provisions of this resolution, such sums as may be necessary are hereby authorized to be appropriated and made immediately available to the Federal Farm Board to be used solely for the following purposes:

"(a) For advancing to such corporations amounts to repay loans held by commercial or intermediate credit banks against wheat or cotton which would be released for donations under this resolution.

"(b) For reimbursing each such corporation for its net equity in the wheat or cotton used for donations under this resolution, according to the current market value at the time of the donation.

"(c) For meeting carrying and handling charges, and interest payments on commercial or intermediate credit bank loans, on or against wheat and cotton which would be released for donations under this resolution between the date of its approval and the delivery of the wheat or cotton to the American National Red Cross or other organization.

"Sec. 4. The Federal Farm Board shall execute its functions under this resolution through its usual administrative staff, and such additional clerical assistance as may be found necessary, without additional appropriations beyond its usual administrative appropriation under the agricultural marketing act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment to the title of the joint resolution.

CHAS. L. McNARY,
G. W. NORRIS,
JOHN B. KENDRICK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

MARVIN JONES,
H. P. FULMER,
G. N. HAUGEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am pleased that the able Senator from Oregon has presented the report. I understand it involves the joint resolution to make available more Government-owned wheat.

Mr. McNARY. The House passed the measure providing 50,000,000 bushels and the Senate reduced that amount and we compromised on 45,000,000 bushels.

Mr. COPELAND. Does it have the trade agreement in it?

Mr. McNARY. Yes; modified so it contains a preferential provision.

Mr. ASHURST. It was my desire when the measure was before the Senate to offer an amendment preventing the distribution of any of this wheat to nationals of a foreign country; but fearful that I might thus impede, if not destroy, the chance of passing the resolution I withheld the amendment.

I have received advices stating that a considerable amount of this Government-owned wheat and flour has been distributed to persons not citizens of the United States and who do not live in the United States. I have not made careful investigation of the charges, hence can not vouch for their accuracy; but I am informed that some nationals of another country—to wit, Mexico—have come into the United States and have received quantities of this wheat or flour and thereby have deprived needy and worthy American citizens of the same. I hope that the Red Cross and such other authority as shall distribute this wheat or flour will exercise care hereafter to see to it that none of this Government wheat or flour is sent into a foreign country, or is distributed to nationals of a foreign country who come into the United States to obtain this relief.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate the Senator's observation and shall take up the matter with Judge Payne during the day.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like to say to the Senator from Arizona that I am perfectly clear in my own mind that under the joint resolution now before us there would be no authority whatever to give any of the wheat to anyone coming here from a foreign country for the purpose of getting the wheat.

Mr. ASHURST. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. If a foreigner were lawfully here he would be entitled to be fed, and we would have to take care of him the same as anybody else; but certainly there is nothing in the law that would make it legal for some one coming from a foreign country to get some of the flour or wheat and take it out of the country to feed people outside of this country.

Mr. ASHURST. I was quite unprepared to believe that nationals of a foreign country were receiving any of this wheat or flour when they entered the United States for that purpose, but reliable persons have sent me the charges that such nationals were coming into the United States and receiving this wheat and flour and returning with it to Mexico.

Mr. NORRIS. That, of course, would be illegal.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is quite right.

While I am on my feet I should like to say to the Senator from New York that the question involved, particularly with reference to feeding the poorer people in large cities, of which New York is an outstanding example, gave to the conferees a rather difficult matter to settle. The conferees agreed on a compromise provision; I think probably neither side was entirely satisfied, and yet both have agreed to the provision. A Representative from the city of the Senator from New York, Mr. LaGuardia, who has taken a very great interest in this matter, although not a member of the conference committee, has acquiesced in the amendment. So I think that will be a sufficient assurance to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator; and I observe the following language in the conference report:

In order to carry out the purposes of this resolution, such wheat or the products thereof may be milled or processed into or exchanged for flour of any kind, bread, or food, provided, in making such exchange, preference shall be given whenever practicable to foods of which wheat products are a substantial ingredient.

I think that is entirely satisfactory, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the conference report is agreed to.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7233) to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, yesterday I made reference to the rather remarkable legislative proceeding in connection with an effort made by former Senator Mason, of Illinois, on February 14, 1899, attempting to place a limitation upon the intent of the Senate about the treaty at peace with Spain. A week before, by an overwhelming vote, the Senate declined to make an almost identical change in the treaty itself. I recited that on February 6, in executive session, when the treaty of peace with Spain was under consideration, there was an effort made, in the first place, to change the language so that Spain would relinquish sovereignty and not cede the territory of Puerto Rico and the Philippines. An effort was made at that time to change the treaty and to add to Article III of the treaty the following language:

The United States, desiring that the people of the archipelago shall be enabled to establish a form of free government suitable to their condition, and securing the rights of life, liberty, and property, and the preservation of order and equal rights therein, assumes for the time being and to the end aforesaid, the control of the archipelago so far as such control shall be needful for the purposes above stated, and will provide that the privileges accorded to Spain by Articles IV and V of this treaty shall be enjoyed.

That proposal was overwhelmingly defeated in the Senate, the vote on the amendment, grouped together, being 30 yeas and 53 nays, an overwhelming vote against the change proposing to leave to the people of the Philippines the privilege of forming their own government.

I referred yesterday to the fact that a week later Mr. Mason, then a Senator from Illinois, proposed this, and I repeat it in order that I may continue the argument laid down by the court:

Resolved, etc., That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States, nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States; but it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands.

When that resolution was put to a vote it developed that there was not a quorum present. There were 48 votes cast, 26 in the affirmative and 22 in the negative.

The court, in the Fourteen Diamond Rings case, commented upon this at some length, and I want to refer more fully to what the court said than I did yesterday. It was developed by those arguing the case that the resolution which I have just read was of importance in rendering the decision; that is, that there was a distinction raised between our relationship with Puerto Rico and our relationship with the Philippines by reason of this resolution; but the court, through Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, set that aside as of no significance. The court said:

But it is said that the case of the Philippines is to be distinguished from that of Puerto Rico because on February 14,

1899, after the ratification of the treaty the Senate resolved, as given in the margin—

And the margin shows the resolution which I have just read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

That it was not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippines into citizenship of the United States, nor to permanently annex those islands.

The contention was disposed of by the court in this language:

We need not consider the force and effect of a resolution of this sort if adopted by Congress, not like that of April 20, 1898, in respect of Cuba, preliminary to the declaration of war, but after title had passed by ratified cession.

It is enough that this was a joint resolution, that it was adopted by the Senate by a vote of 26 to 22, not two-thirds of a quorum, and that is absolutely without legal significance on the question before us. The meaning of the treaty can not be controlled by subsequent explanations of some of those who may have voted to ratify it. What view the House might have taken as to the intention of the Senate in ratifying the treaty we are not informed, nor is it material—

The point being that it never did go to the House, and no action was taken there—and if any implication from the action referred to could properly be indulged it would seem to be that two-thirds of a quorum of the Senate did not consent to the ratification on the grounds indicated.

I think that makes it very clear that even at the time when all these matters were fresh in the minds of legislators and of the people of the United States the court ruled as it did.

My memory goes back very acutely to that period because of an intense interest I had in the liberation of Cuba. I have previously told the Senate that the first public speeches I ever made were made in connection with this matter, when I went with Mr. Quesada about my State, imploring the people to urge those in authority to have our country intervene in Cuba, which it afterwards did, although I am not quite sure that the part I played in the matter had anything to do with the result. Anyway we did intervene.

There was great clamor after it was made known that the Senate had overwhelmingly ratified the treaty. As a matter of fact, the vote of ratification was determined in the affirmative by 57 yeas and 27 nays. When knowledge of the action of the Senate came to the people there was that anti-imperialistic cry which I have no doubt had its effect upon the Senate. If Senators will recall, it was a very bitter controversy. I spoke of the part that Mr. Bryan played in it. He used that as a great argument against the McKinley administration, and there was aroused a very considerable sentiment against our new relationship to the Philippines.

I dare say that cry was not much different than it was when we took Alaska. There has always been in America an underlying sentiment against widening our boundaries beyond the natural confines of this section of North America. Some, at least, of the founding fathers—as Mr. Harding used to call them—anticipated that there would be an expansion which might include our country from the Atlantic to the Pacific; but when we involved ourselves in taking over non-contiguous territory there was resentment.

I know my own feeling was that we made a tremendous mistake in taking over the Philippines. The debates in the House were very bitter against the payment of the $20,000,000 involved. By the way, there is great misapprehension as to what that $20,000,000 was for. It is often said that we bought the Philippines for $20,000,000; that we did not acquire them alone by the victory of our arms but that we purchased them. That is not true. The $20,000,000 involved was to repay Spain for public improvements made in the Philippines, obligations which she had incurred in the way of public improvements in the Philippines.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to my friend.

Mr. PITTMAN. I agree with the historical accuracy of that statement by the Senator; but I doubt if we conquered the Philippines. I think the Philippines had conquered the Spanish before we went there.

Mr. COPELAND. I think that is true. I believe the Senator is right. It is certain that when we took possession of the Philippines we bought more than land. We bought a big row; but it had been a successful war as regards the Filipino arms. They deserve plaudits for the valor and vigor which they used in that war—a battle to determine their freedom and to win their freedom.

I have no wonder that the Filipinos have their aspirations toward liberty. It is perfectly human. Particularly when we think of a people oppressed as they were by the cruelties of Spanish dominion, there can be no wonder that they cry out now for freedom and liberty; and they have my deepest sympathy. I want them to have liberty, but I want them to have it so that when they get the deed there is no flaw upon the title; and that is the contention that I make, have made, and, until I am convinced to the contrary, shall continue to make—that we have not the power to give title to the Filipinos.

I shall hope, as this debate develops, to make it clear from the legal standpoint that the Congress of the United States, the Members of this body, are the agents of the sovereign people. We have no more right to alienate sovereignty over the Philippines than a lawyer has to give a deed to property temporarily under his control, belonging to a client who has not delegated to him the power to deed that property to somebody else.

I do not want the Filipinos to gain a sovereignty which will be questioned through the ages. I want this transfer made to the people of the Philippine Islands in such form that historians of the future will say, "That was the proper method of disposal of the islands."

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator will remember that under the pending bill it will be more than 15 years before any cession of sovereignty or title to land is conveyed. In the meantime autonomous government is given to the Filipinos. Even under the theory of our Constitution we certainly are not prohibited from granting to the Filipinos any form of autonomous government that our Government sees fit to grant.

Mr. COPELAND. I agree fully with that.

Mr. PITTMAN. Therefore, if the Senate were in doubt about the constitutionality of an ultimate cession of sovereignty and conveyance of title at the end of 15 years, it would be well, in the event we pass this bill—thus showing that Congress favors ultimate independence—to submit a proposal for an amendment to the Constitution, which could be easily acted on within the 15 years.

Mr. COPELAND. I am satisfied that without such an amendment we could not give a flawless title.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am sure I know the sentiments of the Senator from New York. I am sure that he is just as much in favor of independence as I am. I am also sure he sincerely believes in the opinion he has expressed with regard to the constitutional question. What I am urging on him is to cooperate with us who wish to give a greater freedom to these people as soon as possible, in view of the fact that neither under this bill nor under the bill suggested by the Senator from Michigan could the question as to the constitutional authority to cede sovereignty or convey title arise in any instance for at least 15 years, which gives us ample opportunity to discuss that legal question and to submit it as a matter of precaution, if necessary, for ratification by three-fourths of the States.

Mr. COPELAND. I am very much interested in what the Senator has just said. Would the Senator agree to an amendment to this bill, at the proper place and in the right form, that the consummation of the plan is contingent upon the consent of the people through a constitutional amendment?

Mr. PITTMAN. That would be very difficult for me to answer at once, Mr. President.

Mr. COPELAND. I present it.

Mr. PITTMAN. If Congress should express its opinion that the Philippines should have a chance for independence under the terms provided in one of these bills, I am satisfied that two-thirds of these bodies would submit the proposal to the States, and I am satisfied that three-fourths of the States would pass it; and yet there would be the doubt remaining then as to ultimate independence, of course. That doubt, I mean, would exist in the minds of the Filipinos and in the minds of American business men. They might say that one State less than three-fourths, although having the right to amend the Constitution so as to assure that, might not do it; and therefore we should of course continue to be threatened with that uncertainty, which is very detrimental to our commerce on both sides. That is the main thing that is worrying me—the uncertainty.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me say to the Senator that if the proponents of this bill would consent to an amendment to the bill making action contingent upon the consent of the people by constitutional amendment—and I think it could be passed—my objections then would relate merely to details of the bill.

In the Seventy-first Congress I introduced a joint resolution, which I put in the RECORD yesterday, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to Philippine independence. I am convinced that if we were to submit to the people a proposal asking them if they would consent to a constitutional amendment delegating to Congress the power to alienate sovereignty over any unincorporated territory now or in the future within our control, they would not pass it; but, on the other hand, if we specifically presented to the people the proposition that conditions now are such, they have so changed in the Philippines, that the time is rapidly approaching when freedom should be given them, I do not believe there would be any opposition of any consequence in the country. There would be some selfish interests in opposition then, such as I accuse the proponents of the bill of having on their side. There would be certain importers and exporters who would oppose the proposal; but if it were submitted to the people, and they said, "Yes; we are willing," every objection I have to the principle would disappear.

I want my friend from Nevada to give some thought to that suggestion, and talk with his friends.

Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada, who is a great student, has spoken about the efforts of the Filipinos themselves in the period preceding and following the Spanish War to establish themselves to subjugate those in opposition. It is a very interesting thing that in this very decision from which I have been quoting there is some discussion of that subject, and I read further from the case of Fourteen Diamond Rings v. United States (183 U. S. 180):

It is further contended that a distinction exists in that while complete possession of Puerto Rico was taken by the United States, this was not so as to the Philippines, because of the armed resistance of the native inhabitants to a greater or less extent.

We must decline to assume that the Government wishes thus to disparage the title of the United States or to place itself in the position of waging a war of conquest.

The sovereignty of Spain over the Philippines and possession under claim of title had existed for a long series of years prior to the war with the United States. The fact that there were insurrections against her or that uncivilized tribes may have defied her will did not affect the validity of her title. She granted the islands to the United States, and the grantee in accepting them took nothing less than the whole grant.

I emphasized that on another occasion that there can be no doubt that the Philippine Archipelago belongs to the people of the United States. It does not belong to Congress, it does not belong to me, it belongs to us only in the fact that we are citizens of this country. All the citizens have a common ownership in the Philippines, and when we took them we took nothing less than the whole grant.

The court continues in its opinion:

If those in insurrection against Spain continued in insurrection against the United States, the legal title and possession of the latter remained unaffected.

We do not understand that it is claimed that in carrying on the pending hostilities the Government is seeking to subjugate the people of a foreign country, but, on the contrary, that it is preserving order and suppressing insurrection in territory of the United States. It follows that the possession of the United States is adequate possession under legal title, and this can not be asserted for one purpose and denied for another. We dismiss the suggested distinction as untenable.

Mr. Justice Brown, an old friend of mine, coming from the same State, in concurring in the conclusion of the court enlarged somewhat upon the subject just discussed, and it bears on this remarkable resolution which was proposed in the Senate on the 14th of February, 1899. I am determined, Mr. President, to find out about what led up to that. It seems to me it is one of the most interesting of the unsolved problems of history. We have seen many reversals of opinion in the Senate, but I declare I never saw such a somersault taken by the Senate, when, in a week's time, they simply went head over heels. I want to know why they did it, and I shall find out if I can.

Referring to the Senate resolution, Mr. Justice Brown said, as appears on page 182:

With regard to this, I would say that in my view the case would not be essentially different if this resolution had been adopted by a unanimous vote of the Senate. To be efficacious such resolution must be considered either (1) as an amendment to the treaty or (2) as a legislative act qualifying or modifying the treaty. It is neither.

It can not be regarded as part of the treaty, since it received neither the approval of the President nor the consent of the other contracting power. A treaty in its legal sense is defined by Bouvier as "a compact made between two or more independent nations with a view to public welfare" (2 Law Dic. 1136) and by Webster as "an agreement, league, or contract between two or more nations or sovereigns, formally signed by commissioners properly authorized and solemnly ratified by the sovereigns or the supreme power of each state." In its essence it is a contract. It differs from an ordinary contract only in being an agreement between independent states instead of private parties. (Foster v. Neilson, 2 Pet. 253, 314; Head Money Cases, 112 U. S. 580.) By the Constitution (Art. II, sec. 2) the President "shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur." Obviously the treaty must contain the whole contract between the parties, and the power of the Senate is limited to a ratification of such terms as have already been agreed upon between the President, acting for the United States, and the commissioners of the other contracting power. The Senate has no right to ratify the treaty and introduce new terms into it which shall be obligatory upon the other power, although it may refuse its ratification or make such ratification conditional upon the adoption of amendments to the treaty.

Much as we did in connection with the World Court and the League of Nations. In both those cases the Senate refused to ratify and suggested amendments. The amendments were sent to the other parties to the treaties, in the case of the League of Nations not accepted, in the case of the World Court modified in some mysterious manner, which only high Heaven can decipher. But the Senate, when it was considering the treaty of peace with Spain, and afterwards considering the Mason resolution, sought to amend the contract between the United States and Spain by the insertion of new language, which, of course, as Mr. Justice Brown points out, is simply impossible. A contract can not be modified in that way; a contract between nations, which is a treaty, any more than a contract between individuals, where one party wants a change which is not acquiesced in by the other.

I continue the quotation on page 183:

If, for instance, the treaty with Spain had contained a provision instating the inhabitants of the Philippines as citizens of the United States, the Senate might have refused to ratify it until this provision was stricken out. But it could not, in my opinion, ratify the treaty and then adopt a resolution declaring it not to be its intention to admit the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands to the privileges of citizenship of the United States. Such resolution would be inoperative as an amendment to the treaty, since it had not received the assent of the President or the Spanish commissioners.

At this point Mr. Justice Brown turned aside to an allusion which had been made in the argument in the case of the New York Indians against United States, reported in 170 United States. He said:

Allusion was made to this question in the New York Indians v. United States (170 U. S. 1, 21), wherein it appeared that, when a treaty with certain Indian tribes was laid before the Senate for ratification, several articles were stricken out, several others amended, a new article added, and a proviso adopted that the treaty should have no force or effect whatever, until the amendment had been submitted to the tribes, and they had given their free and voluntary assent thereto. This resolution, however, was not found in the original or in the published copy of the treaty, or in the proclamation of the President, which contained the treaty without the amendments. With reference to this the court observed: "The power to make treaties is vested by the Constitution in the President and the Senate, and, while this proviso was adopted by the Senate, there was no evidence that it ever received the sanction or approval of the President."

It will be recalled with reference to the same resolution that Mr. Justice Fuller pointed out the fact that there was not a quorum present, certainly not two-thirds of a quorum, but Mr. Justice Brown attacks it on the other ground, that there was no evidence that it ever received the sanction or approval of the President.

It can not be considered as a legislative act, since the power to legislate is vested in the President, Senate, and House of Representatives. There is something, too, which shocks the conscience in the idea that a treaty can be put forth as embodying the terms of an arrangement with a foreign power or an Indian tribe, a material provision of which is unknown to one of the contracting parties, and is kept in the background to be used by the other only when the exigencies of a particular case may demand it. The proviso appears never to have been called to the attention of the tribes, who would naturally assume that the treaty embodied in the presidential proclamation contained all the terms of the arrangement.

And yet that is what the Senate tried to do on the 4th day of February, 1899. After the treaty had been ratified by the Senate and proclaimed by the President, it was then sought by legislative act to put new substance into the treaty. The effort was made to declare it to be the intention of the Congress that by the adoption of the treaty there was no thought about the incorporation of statehood for the Philippines, but that independence was to be granted them at some future time. Of course, it is readily seen—even I as a layman can see it—that the words of the Supreme Court of the United States hold that that was utterly futile and of no avail.

Mr. Justice Brown went on to say:

In short, it seems to me entirely clear that this resolution can not be considered a part of the treaty.

I think it equally clear that it can not be treated as a legislative act, though it may be conceded that under the decisions of this court Congress has the power to disregard or modify a treaty with a foreign state. This was not done.

The resolution in question was introduced as a joint resolution, but it never received the assent of the House of Representatives or the signature of the President. While a joint resolution, when approved by the President, or, being disapproved, is passed by two-thirds of each House, has the effect of a law (Const., Art. I, sec. 7), no such effect can be given to a resolution of either House acting independently of the other. Indeed, the above clause expressly requires concurrent action upon a resolution before the same shall take effect.

This question was considered by Mr. Attorney General Cushing in his opinion on certain resolutions of Congress (6 Ops. Att'y. Gen., 680), in which he held that while joint resolutions of Congress are not distinguishable from bills, and have the effect of law, separate resolutions of either House of Congress, except in matters appertaining to their own parliamentary rights, have no legal effect to constrain the action of the President or heads of departments. The whole subject is there elaborately discussed.

In any view taken of this resolution it appears to me that it can be considered only as expressing the individual views of the Senators voting upon it.

Mr. President, it is clear enough as this decision says that when Spain granted the islands to the United States, the grantee in accepting them took nothing less than the whole grant. I think no one can question that our sovereignty over the island is absolute. The question is, Can we alienate that sovereignty by an act of Congress? My contention is that we can not. I do not want to evade that question. I have no desire to evade it. I hope I am open to conviction if I am wrong about it, but at this moment there is no shadow of doubt in my mind that we can not alienate sovereignty without the consent of the people of the United States.

This is no fanciful statement. This is not something that is an emanation from my brain. The view which I have expressed has controlled the American people from the time of the Constitutional Convention in 1787 down to now. It goes even back of that, because in the Confederacy, before the adoption of the Constitution, our possessions were considered inalienable. Read the Articles of Confederation. I do not happen to have them before me or I should repeat what was said there. But from the beginning it has been the view of all who have studied the question that we have no power under the Constitution to alienate a single square foot of American territory.

I hold in my hand a copy of the writings of Thomas Jefferson, memorial edition, issued under the auspices of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Association. I regret that since this discussion has arisen I have not had access to my own library, because there is full confirmation of what it sets forth here in Jefferson's writings in what can be found in the writings of Alexander Hamilton. There is no difference of opinion. In the volumes of Hamilton's writings that I have in my library this matter was discussed at greater length. I want to quote from a statement of Mr. Jefferson as regards the right to alienate any portion of territory.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I understand the Senator to take the position that the United States can not sell an acre of land or a foot of land belonging to the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. That is the position I take.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It can never dispose of it?

Mr. COPELAND. It can not.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. In that connection has the Senator had occasion to study the treaty between Great Britain and the then American colonies?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes, I have; and I should be glad to have the Senator quote it. I have an answer for it. There never has been a cession of a square foot of land except in the settlement of boundaries where we were holding land which the commissioners held not to be ours.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Does the Senator take the position that Great Britain did not have the power to grant independence to the original thirteen Colonies?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, no; and I do not take the position either that we could not give up Long Island in case of a disastrous war. By treaty following a disastrous war we could give up anything that we were forced to give up because we were on our knees.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The treaty referred to by me was the treaty which followed the Revolutionary War.

Mr. COPELAND. The Ashburton treaty?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No, earlier than that; the 1783 treaty which followed our successful Revolutionary War. By that treaty Great Britain surrendered sovereignty over the then thirteen Colonies and acknowledged them as free and independent. Nobody questioned it.

Mr. COPELAND. That is true.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am wondering whether the Senator takes the position now, as he has indicated that he does, that the United States of America can not by treaty surrender territory or its jurisdiction over its people.

Mr. COPELAND. It can not be done by treaty except under the doctrine of force majeure. Yes; if we are whipped in a war and have to give up, we could even divest ourselves of the Golden State, terrible though it seems. I would not vote for it until the very last drop of blood had been shed.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. California does indeed remain the Golden State, as I exhibit to the Senator the only $20 gold piece I have.

Mr. COPELAND. So far as I know, that is the only $20 gold piece any friend of mine has! [Laughter.] It seems to me as strange as if it came from the planet Mars. Let me look at it again! That is wonderful. I would not dare touch it. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I contend that under no circumstances except the force of necessity could we alienate a foot of our territory.

I was about to quote from the fathers. On page 337 of the writings of Jefferson I find this statement made on February 25, 1793:

The President desires the opinions of the heads of the three departments, and of the Attorney General, on the following question, to-wit: Mr. Ternant having applied for money equivalent to three millions of livres, to be furnished on account of our debt to France at the request of the executive of that country, which sum is to be laid out in provisions within the United States, to be sent to France. Shall the money be furnished?

I will ask, Mr. President, that the next couple of paragraphs be included in the RECORD because they have no bearing on the argument.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury stated it as his opinion, that making a liberal allowance for the depreciation of assignats (no rule of liquidation having been yet fixed), a sum of about $318,000 may not exceed the arrearages equitably due to France to the end of 1792, and that the whole sum asked for may be furnished within periods capable of answering the purpose of Mr. Ternant's application, without a derangement of the Treasury.

Whereupon the Secretaries of State and War, and the Attorney General, are of opinion that the whole sum asked for by Mr. Ternant ought to be furnished: The Secretary of the Treasury is of opinion that the supply ought not exceed the above-mentioned sum of $318,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Then Mr. Jefferson continues, on page 338:

The President having required the attendance of the heads of the three departments, and of the Attorney General, at his house, on Monday, the 25th of February, 1793, the following questions were proposed and answers given:

1. The Governor of Canada having refused to let us obtain provisions from that province, or to pass them along the water communication to the place of treaty with the Indians; and the Indians having refused to let them pass peaceably along what they call the bloody path, the Governor of Canada at the same time proposing to furnish the whole provisions necessary, ought the treaty to proceed? Answer unanimous; it ought to proceed.

2. Have the Executive or the Executive and Senate together authority to relinquish to the Indians the right of soil of any part of the land north of the Ohio which has been validly obtained by former treaties?

The Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and Attorney General are of opinion that the Executive and Senate have such authority, provided that no grants to individuals, nor reservations to States, be thereby infringed. The Secretary of State is of opinion they have no such authority to relinquish.

3. Will it be expedient to make any such relinquishments to the Indians if essential to peace?

The Secretaries of the Treasury and War, and the Attorney General, are of opinion it will be expedient to make such relinquishments if essential to peace, provided it do not include any lands sold or received for special purposes (the reservations for trading places excepted). The Secretary of State is of opinion that the Executive and Senate have authority to stipulate with the Indians and that if essential to peace it will be expedient to stipulate that we will not settle any lands between those already sold or reserved for special purposes and the lines heretofore validly established with the Indians.

Whether the Senate shall be previously consulted on this point. The opinion unanimously is that it will be better not to consult them previously.

I think we can turn aside for a moment to note that there was secret diplomacy even in those days; there was not that openness in diplomacy for which we now contend so vigorously.

February the 26th, 1793. Notes on the proceedings of yesterday. (See the formal opinions given to the President in writing and signed.)

First question. We are all of opinion that the treaty should proceed merely to gratify the public opinion and not from an expectation of success.

Mr. President, in that conference we find both Hamilton and Jefferson, as well as Edmund Randolph, and they solemnly agreed that they were going to do this just to gratify public opinion. They resorted to expediency as long ago as 1793, and I think there has been no change in the policy in some quarters since that time.

Mr. Jefferson proceeds:

I expressed myself strongly that the event was so uncompromising, that I thought the preparations for a campaign should go on without the least relaxation, and that a day should be fixed with the commissioners for the treaty, beyond which they should not permit the treaty to be protracted, by which day orders should be given for our forces to enter into action. The President took up the thing instantly, after I had said this, and declared that he was so much of the opinion that the treaty would end in nothing that he then, in the presence of us all, gave orders to General Knox not to slacken the preparations for the campaign in the least but to exert every nerve in preparing for it. Knox said something about the ultimate day for continuing the negotiations. I acknowledged myself not a judge on what day the campaign should begin, but that, whatever it was, that day should terminate the treaty. Knox said he thought a winter campaign was always the most efficacious against the Indians. I was of opinion, since Great Britain insisted on furnishing provisions, that we should offer to repay. Hamilton thought we should not.

Second question—

And this is the important one—

I considered our right of preemption of the Indian lands not as amounting to any dominion, or jurisdiction, or paramountship whatever but merely in the nature of a remainder after the extinguishment of a present right, which gave us no present right whatever, but of preventing other nations from taking possession and so defeating our expectancy; that the Indians had the full, undivided, and independent sovereignty as long as they choose to keep it, and that this might be forever; that as fast as we extend our rights by purchase from them, so fast we extend the limits of our society; and as soon as a new portion became encircled within our line it became a fixed limit of our society; that the Executive, with either or both branches of the legislature, could not alien any part of our territory; that by the law of nations it was settled that the unity and indivisibility of the society was so fundamental that it could not be dismembered by the constituted authorities, except, 1, where all power was delegated to them (as in the case of despotic governments), or, 2, where it was expressly delegated; that neither of these delegations had been made to our General Government, and, therefore, that it had no right to dismember or alienate any portion of territory once ultimately consolidated with us; and that we could no more cede to the Indians than to the English or Spaniards, as it might, according to acknowledged principles, remain as irrevocably and eternally with the one as the other. But I thought that as we had a right to sell and settle lands once comprehended within our lines, so we might forbear to exercise that right, retaining the property till circumstances should be more favorable to the settlement, and this I agreed to do in the present instance, if necessary for peace.

Hamilton agreed to the doctrine of the law of nations, as laid down in Europe, but that it was founded on the universality of settlement there; consequently, that no lopping off of territory could be made without a lopping off of citizens, which required their consent; but that the law of nations for us must be adapted to the circumstance of our unsettled country, which he conceived the President and Senate may cede; that the power of treaty was given to them by the Constitution, without restraining it to particular objects; consequently, that it was given in as plenipotentiary a form as held by any sovereign in any other society. Randolph was of opinion there was a difference between a cession to Indians and to any others, because it only restored the ceded part to the condition in which it was before we bought it, and consequently, that we might buy it again hereafter; therefore, he thought the Executive and Senate could cede it. Knox joined in the main opinion. The President discovered no opinion, but he made some efforts to get us to join in some terms which could unite us all, and he seemed to direct those efforts more toward me; but the thing could not be done.

Third question. We agreed in idea as to the line to be drawn, to wit, so as to retain all lands appropriated, or granted, or reserved.

Mr. President, in a fuller account of this episode it seems that the President submitted these questions particularly to Mr. Hamilton and to Mr. Jefferson, but first to Jefferson, who took the view that we could not alienate any territory. That is a very brief statement of his conclusions. Then President Washington passed the paper on to Mr. Hamilton. Mr. Hamilton made no comment on the question of the alienation of territory except to this extent: He asked the question, "Could we not alienate uninhabited territory?" Mr. Jefferson replied, "If we can alienate uninhabited territory we can alienate inhabited territory and thus give away people." President Washington apparently agreed with the view which Jefferson expressed.

However, I wish to go farther into that matter to show the attitude of the founding fathers, as Mr. Harding called them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. How does the Senator construe section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution which reads:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

How does the Senator construe that in connection with what he has just read?

Mr. COPELAND. Before I get through with my argument, I shall go into that very extensively, but that provision does not mean "dispose of" in the sense of selling. It means management of the property; that is, where we speak of lands in contradistinction to things, to personal property.

Mr. SMOOT. The Government of the United States sells lands now.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; but it does not alienate sovereignty over people.

Mr. SMOOT. It does not alienate sovereignty, but the Constitution provides:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have innumerable references to what the courts have said on that question.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator is going to come to it later, we might just as well let it go over, unless he desires to answer the question now.

Mr. COPELAND. I am coming to it later.

Mr. SMOOT. If Congress can "dispose of it," it seems that the authority, so far as that is concerned, is granted within or without the limits of the United States. The provision, in my opinion, can not possibly be construed as the Senator has construed it. I thought while on that subject I should like to have the Senator give the reasons why he takes the position he does.

Mr. COPELAND. I will be very glad to do that, and I might as well do it now.

THE HOME LOAN BANK BILL

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I join with other Senators and with the country in hoping for an early adjournment of this Congress; but, nevertheless, I am strongly opposed to an adjournment before the Senate takes action on a few important matters of legislation.

There is the 3-way farm relief bill championed by the national farm organizations. I regard it as most important. The price level of farm products must rise before we can start on the return road to prosperity.

The home loan bank bill, already passed by the House and approved by the Senate committee, by all means should receive immediate action, and the action should be favorable. I take this opportunity of urging the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], in charge of this important legislation, to bring it before the Senate and get a vote on it before adjournment.

Mr. President, I am getting letters and telegrams every day urging the passage of this measure. It was recommended by President Hoover; it has the approval of the leadership of both branches of Congress. Some such backing for the building and loan associations seems to be very necessary. I hope the Senator from Indiana will insist upon the passage of this measure. And I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and lie on the table a number of letters and telegrams from among those I have received upon the subject.

There being no objection, the letters and telegrams were ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KANSAS BUILDING AND LOAN LEAGUE,
Topeka, Kans., June 29, 1932.

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am wondering if it is not possible to soon have a vote on the Federal home loan bank bill. I realize that it is sometimes difficult to work in so many different measures shortly before adjournment, but this bill has passed the House, and the bill as it was passed in the House has been recommended for passage by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. This measure was introduced early in the session and has been considered very carefully by the committees.

I realize that there is certain opposition to this measure, but at the same time Congress has already provided ways and means of relief for the very concerns which are now opposing this measure. I feel rather confident, from information obtainable, that if this measure was called to a vote that it would pass the Senate without any trouble. I realize that you have been working very hard for its passage and that you favor its provisions, and your support thus far given this measure is certainly appreciated by the associations throughout the State. However, I would like to ask that you take it upon yourself to get this measure before the Senate for a vote if there is any possible way of doing so.

The situation in Kansas as regards building and loan associations is not so favorable as it was 30 or 60 days ago, and there is practically no money available in these institutions to make any loans for home purposes of whatever nature they may be. Our associations do not even have the funds to make loans for remodeling or any repair work. If we were able to obtain funds for this purpose, many of our laboring men now unemployed could be given some work, which would greatly relieve the general situation.

There is another advantage in having this bill, which I think the building and loans have in mind, and that is that it is generally conceded that the banks have been greatly strengthened since the passage of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and that the general public feels and shows more confidence in the banks at the present time. If this is true, then this bill should do the same thing for the building and loan associations. It is hard to realize that Congress can refuse to recognize the financial institutions representing resources in excess of $9,000,000,000 in their request for this measure.

Your immediate urge to get this bill on the floor of the Senate for a vote will certainly be appreciated by your many building and loan friends throughout this State.

Yours very truly,

PAUL B. MORRISON,
Executive Secretary.

IOLA, KANS., June 30, 1932.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER:

Twelve million people vitally interested in home loan bank bill, including over 200,000 in Kansas. This is not "pork-barrel" legislation but is sound measure affecting home owners, wage earners, and gets to smallest communities. Construction and associated industries can not recover without it. Is Republican measure passed by Democratic House and shoved in behind Philippine independence by Republican Senate. Building and loan members looking for leaders to bring bill to immediate vote in Senate and see that it passes.

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER,

Senate Building:

Wichita association of building and loans as well as building-trades organizations feel it would be disastrous if Federal home loan bill does not pass present session of Congress. We confidently hope that you and Senator MCGILL will do everything in your power to have this come up for consideration before adjournment.

THE CAPITOL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION,
Topeka, Kans., June 29, 1932.

The Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,

The United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: For an administration measure, which was recognized and passed by a Democratic House, it seems to me that the home loan bank bill is receiving very little attention. I can not understand why Senators can not demand that this bill be brought out and acted upon. It is very important that this be done, for each day makes the need of this act more acute in the building and loan associations of the United States.

We must have some such institution unless building and loans are just left to freeze up and thaw out as times improve. The banks have received help time after time and, while building and loan associations were named in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation measure, they have received practically no help from this organization. Not one cent of this money has ever come into the State of Kansas.

I know that you can not realize how important this is to the building and loan associations of Kansas. We worry about the condition of the farmer all the time and we know that he needs consideration, and it is just as true that building and loan associations need help.

In this particular instance we are not asking the Government for dole. We are merely asking for the establishment of an institution that makes it possible for building and loan associations to operate effectively and individually. If these institutions are worth anything to the country, they should be given consideration—if not, then the proper course is being pursued, and they will liquidate and go out of existence.

You have agreed that you would support the measure when it came to a vote, but now we want somebody to bring this bill out where it can be seen and acted upon. We are asking your assistance in seeing that this is done.

Will you please give this prompt attention, as this bill must be passed before Congress adjourns?

Yours very truly,

C. A. STERLING, Secretary.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7233) to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. Referring to what the Senator from Kansas has just said, I am very eager to have the home loan bank bill brought before the Senate and enacted into law. Last night we thought we had an agreement that the pending bill should go over until December as it should. I think this morning we have made some progress with an amendment to the bill, including a constitutional amendment, but there was objection raised to the unanimous-consent agreement. I hope and believe, however, that the home loan bank bill will come up, and it should be disposed of.

Now, Mr. President, I want to speak about what the Senator from Utah has just said. I do not want to do it from my own words; I want something more authoritative than anything I might say to be put in the RECORD as an answer to the Senator.

One of the two authorities who are quoted most extensively by those who contend that we have a right to alienate sovereignty in such a way as is proposed here is Mr. Justice Malcolm, of the Philippine Supreme Court. It so happens that he was a college mate of mine, and an old friend. We exchange gifts at Christmas time, and are very good friends; and the book which I have in my hand is a gift from him. The title of it is "Philippine Constitutional Law," by Mr. Justice George A. Malcolm, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands and professor of public law in the University of the Philippines.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, the Senator has probably seen in the RECORD an opinion by this very judge on the point he has been discussing for the last two days.

Mr. COPELAND. That is just what I am going to speak on now.

Mr. HAWES. He takes the opposite view from the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; but not with regard to the particular matter about which I have been speaking.

I want to make clear to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and others who may be interested, that one of the strongest advocates of the theory that we have a right to alienate sovereignty is my old friend Mr. Justice Malcolm; and if by chance he should ever read what I am saying, I want him to know, as he already knows in his heart, that I would not say anything that could possibly be offensive to him, or impair in any way the very delightful friendship which has existed between us for many years—more than 40 years, in fact.

On page 179 of Malcolm's work on Philippine Constitutional Law, I find this:

The Constitution likewise grants to Congress the power "to dispose of . . . the territory or other property belonging to the United States."

That is what the Senator just quoted from the Constitution.

The full scope of this provision "has never been definitely settled." It is probable, however, that the term "territory" as here used "is merely descriptive of one kind of property; and is equivalent to the word lands." If this be true, this provision of the Constitution would have no bearing on a change of status for the Philippines, as a political entity.

He makes reference also to the discussion by Mr. Justice White of the same question in the case of Downes against Bidwell, found in 182 United States Reports.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President—

Mr. COPELAND. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nevada, because he has an important conference report.

Mr. ODDIE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I send to the desk the conference report on the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I do so because the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] desires to be here when this conference report is taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Couzens	Jones	Robinson, Ark.

Copeland	Johnson	Reed	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ODDIE: I ask that the conference report be read.

The conference report was read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9699) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 17, 28, and 29.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 6, 7, 8, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, and 52, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"The offices of surveyors of customs (except the surveyor of customs at the port of New York) and appraisers of merchandise (except the appraiser of merchandise at the port of New York), 21 in all, with annual salaries aggregating $102,000, are hereby abolished. The duties imposed by law and regulations upon surveyors and appraisers of customs, their assistants and deputies (except the surveyor and the appraiser, their assistants and deputies at the port of New York) are hereby transferred to, imposed upon, and continued in positions now established in the Customs Service by or pursuant to law, as the Secretary of the Treasury by appropriate regulation shall specify; and he is further authorized to designate the titles by which such positions shall be officially known hereafter. The Secretary of the Treasury, in performing the duties imposed upon him by this paragraph, shall administer the same in such a manner that the transfer of duties provided hereby will not result in the establishment of any new positions in the Customs Service."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$950,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$410,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$27,800,220"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "$19,460,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendment numbered 9.

E. S. BROUSSARD,
PARK TRAMMELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH W. BYRNS,

M. H. THATCHER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether the amendment providing a fund for rural sanitation, and so forth, has been dealt with in this report?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, that amendment was lost in the conference.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am going to ask that the conference report be rejected, and that the matter be given further consideration. I am morally sure that the matter is entitled to more attention that has been given it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that I think that was about the last amendment we considered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have talked to more than one member on the conference committee, who tell me that they did not even know that it had been yielded.

Mr. ODDIE. There was no Budget estimate for this item, but the Senate conferees, I know, tried to hold it in the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. A bill passed the Senate carrying this exact amount, for the express purposes stated in the amendment, by unanimous vote, early in the present session, and the Senate having taken that action on the matter, is entitled to have the amendment given more consideration. I am going to ask that the report be rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I very much hope the chairman of the committee will not resist having the report sent back for further consideration in regard to this item. While I was on the conference, I did not realize that the Senate conferees had receded on this particular amendment. Of course, I know the chairman of the committee knows exactly what was done, but it is a matter of a great deal of importance, and if we could get together and have it sent back, it ought not to take very long. I hope the chairman will be willing to have that done.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I add my feeble voice also to that suggestion, because I feel sure after having talked with the author of the amendment that the conferees can reach some agreement with reference to it, probably by having the House accept with an amendment or the Senate recede with an amendment, which would take care of the matter.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the typewriter matter.

By reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 14132, I find this, it being my own comment:

Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill? There was a misapprehension in the committee about these rates. After the words "to wit," in line 10, page 7, there should be inserted "Portable desk models, $60." Then, in line 11, "10-inch" should be "$70." I have here the General Supply Committee specifications, and what I am saying to the Senate now is in accordance with them. So there should be inserted in line 10, after the words "to wit," "Portable desk models, $60." That is where the "$60" comes in. Then, on line 11, the committee amendment should be rejected and left at $70.

The Presiding Officer ruled that since it was an amendment to the original text, it could not be considered except by unanimous consent, and there was objection.

I renewed the request later in the afternoon, and at that time proposed that the language be changed in accordance with what I have just said was my original proposal. I do not seem to be able to put my finger on the place in the RECORD where that occurred, but the RECORD was not complete at the second time, and I find now that the conference report comes in referring to portable desk models, "10-inch," and so forth. That is not the way it was stated. It was stated, "portable desk models, $60; 10-inch correspondence models, $70," and so on. Now the committee comes in, having receded, so that the Government would be permitted to pay only $60 for the standard machine, which it can not buy for that price.

If I may have the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill, if this conference report goes back, I shall hope that this matter regarding typewriters will be made right, so that it would be, "portable desk model $60," and the 10-inch correspondence models, $70. That was the intention of the Senate by the action which we took.

Mr. SMOOT. In regard to the reduction from $70 to $60, not only the conferees of the House but the representatives of the department said that they could buy these portable desk models at $60 to-day.

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly; the portable desk models can be bought, but the way the bill comes back to us the standard 10-inch typewriters must now be bought at $60.

Mr. SMOOT. They can be bought for $48 and some cents.

Mr. COPELAND. That is not the statement of the General Supply Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the information furnished the conferees. Not only that but that they had been buying them for $60 even before the conditions existing to-day.

Mr. COPELAND. Buying what—standard machines?

Mr. SMOOT. Buying the standard typewriters.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope they will be able to buy them for $40 or $25, but the point I make is that that item was not in conference. The action of the Senate was to disagree to the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. From $70 to $1 was in conference, because any amount from nothing to $70 was in conference, and, therefore, we struck out the $70 and made it $60, because there was no necessity of its being there, we were told.

Mr. COPELAND. I am most unfortunate in my choice of language. The point I make is that the conference committee had no latitude except so far as they might strike out the portable desk model, because the Senate disagreed to the change from $70 to $60, and it should have been left at $70. Therefore that item was not in conference.

Mr. SMOOT. But the amendment striking out $70 and inserting $60 was in conference.

Mr. COPELAND. That is my contention exactly; that it was not in conference because the Senate rejected the Senate committee amendment and left it at $70.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is mistaken. Here is the bill. I will hand it to the Senator and he can see for himself. Here is the amendment—$60, striking out $70 and inserting $60.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me show the Senator something.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the official copy.

Mr. COPELAND. That may be the official copy, but mistakes sometimes occur in official copies. The Senate rejected that amendment changing the figure from $70 to $60 and it was not in conference. Therefore the act of the conference committee was improper, under the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am morally sure that if this bill goes back to conference an adjustment can be made, if the Senate conferees will give some consideration to the item of the amendment relating to rural sanitation. I have made some investigation into the subject and I am not at all pleased at the way the matter has been handled. A bill in language identical with that in the Senate amendment was reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry by unanimous vote of that committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I think more than likely we would save time by letting the bill go back. I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, if the chairman of the committee will agree.

I would like to ask a question of the Chair. Could not the report be agreed to, with the exception of the amendment referred to by the Senator from Arkansas, and let it go back on that one amendment only?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That would be satisfactory to me; but I have no authority to speak about the other amendments. In fact, I am not familiar with them.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee whether the item of $375,000, and the second item of $85,000, for air mail service from Charlotte via Columbia to Augusta, Ga., were retained in the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. The amount of the appropriation was retained in the bill, but they did not want to earmark any appropriation. The amount of $90,000, as I remember it, was included in the bill, as well as the $375,000. In other words, instead of $19,000,000, nineteen million four hundred and some odd thousand dollars, just as the Senate had it, was inserted.

Mr. GEORGE. Four hundred and sixty thousand dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. That was appropriated to take care of those two items.

Mr. GEORGE. So the amounts are retained?

Mr. SMOOT. The amounts are retained.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, if this is a full conference report, and if this one item is to go back, we will have to reject the whole conference report, and have another conference.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, before the question is put, I would like to reply to the Senator from Georgia on the question of the air mail. The bill as it passed the Senate contained an item of $460,000 in addition to the $19,000,000 carried in the House bill. That was for resuming the night air mail service between Salt Lake City, Utah, Las Vegas, Nev., and Los Angeles and San Diego, Calif. Also $85,000 of that $460,000 was for the establishing of a new air mail service between Charlotte, N. C., Columbia, S. C., and Augusta, Ga.

The conferees decided that, as a matter of policy, it would be better to remove what are called the earmarks; but they left the amount at $460,000. So the Post Office Department is on notice that the conferees of both Houses intended that the Salt Lake City-Los Angeles line be re-established and that the line through North and South Carolina to Georgia be created. It is a moral and binding obligation on the Post Office Department to establish that service. I think there can be no question, when the conferees of both Houses have agreed to the item, and the money that was appropriated for those two particular purposes is provided for in the bill, that the service will be established.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was rejected.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments, except amendment numbered 9, ask for a further conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ODDIE, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. MOSES, Mr. BROUSSARD, and Mr. TRAMMELL conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada a question?

Mr. ODDIE. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask the Senator, when the report goes back to conference, to give renewed consideration to the matter of typewriters. I think we should get information about it. The advices I get are that the standard machine is the $70 machine; but I ask that the conferees discover the facts regarding it. My contention is that, regardless of what the RECORD may show, the item was not in conference.

Mr. ODDIE. I shall request the conferees to give attention to the item.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JONES submitted the following report:

The Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12443) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1932, and June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20, 21, 22, 29, and 41.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 24, 25, 27, 28, 31, 32, 33, 35, 38, 39, 40, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 72, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"General and Special Claims Commissions, United States and Mexico: The unexpended balance of the appropriation for the General and Special Claims Commissions, United States and Mexico, for the fiscal year 1932, shall remain available for the same purposes until June 30, 1933."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments Nos. 23, 30, 34, 37, and 42.

FREDERICK HALE,
JOHN B. KENDRICK,
CARL HAYDEN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to say with reference to the matters in disagreement that they have to be taken back to the House. The conferees on the part of the House will recommend their adoption by the House.

The report was agreed to.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7233) to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to proceed to a vote on the pending amendment and then to proceed as rapidly as possible to the balance of the amendments. This is the first opportunity I have had to obtain the floor since the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] were indirectly discussing earlier in the afternoon the question of the good faith in which these amendments may or may not have been offered.

I want to express my particular gratitude to the able senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], who made it very plain that, so far as his judgment is concerned, he understands the amendments are submitted in good faith and are submitted for no other purpose than to undertake to make what I deem to be an unpalatable bill as palatable as possible. Those who may feel that I have some collateral purpose are simply mistaken, and I regret that they may have found it even remotely necessary to express such a thought. The RECORD belies them. I have occupied the floor but a comparatively few moments and always in discussion of the immediate legislative objective. As a matter of blunt truth, the whole debate, involving the interests of 13,000,000 people in the Philippines and 120,000,000 people in the United States, has run on for little more than a day. This is precious little consideration to give to so large and so far-reaching a problem.

I think I have demonstrated during the past year that no Senator, not even excepting the able senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES], has any more definite or more constructive or more sympathetic interest in Philippine independence upon a proper and adequate and ultimately permanent basis than I have. During the past three months, in my capacity as chairman of the so-called steering committee, if there had been any desire upon my part to take advantage of the Senate situation for the purpose of preventing or delaying the consideration of this problem upon its merit, I think it will be conceded that I would not have cheerfully insisted upon a place upon the Senate's regular order of preferred business for the pending measure.

One year ago I took three months to visit the Philippine Islands, to study the problem at first hand, by way of supplement to the study and consideration which I had given it in committee. I returned with certain fixed convictions and with a real friendship for the Filipino people. I intend to persist in those convictions. I decline to be turned aside from submitting those convictions to the Senate by any inferences that my purpose may be other than a good-faith purpose.

It has been repeatedly urged that this entire problem was canvassed at great length and in great detail by the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, of which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], the authors of the pending measure, and myself are all members. It is absolutely true, Mr. President, that in my five years' experience in the Senate no subject was ever canvassed with any greater earnestness or with any greater sympathy than the subject of Philippine independence was canvassed by this particular committee at this particular time.

I have said before, and I say again, that I have nothing but the utmost respect for the devotion which the senior Senator from Missouri has given to this cause. The mere fact, however, that we happen to disagree upon the correct route to an ultimate objective is no reason why we should in any degree differ respecting the good faith in which we each choose our respective routes.

It is true that the subject was canvassed with great finality in the committee. It is true that the committee was overwhelmingly in favor of the so-called Hawes-Cutting bill as it has been submitted to the Senate. But I know of no rule or precedent in the Senate which would directly or indirectly call upon me to withhold my view of the matter simply because I happen to have been overwhelmingly voted down in the committee. If I am alone in the possession of the view that I hold, namely, that so long as the American flag is in the Orient American authority shall remain in the Orient equal to the responsibilities which we thus carry and meet—if I am alone in that view, I regret it, but my lonesomeness will not for a single moment deter me from continuing to present to the Senate what I believe to be its meditated error. Minorities have been known to win ultimate vindication.

It is true, I repeat, that the committee under the chairmanship of the able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] was almost united in favor of the pending measure. But it is also true that there are certain executive departments of the Government which have an equal right of consultation in a problem of this character. It is equally true that the State Department in respect of our international relationships and the War Department, in respect of the administrative responsibilities of the Philippine Islands, have a right of consultation in the settlement of a problem of this character quite equal to the consideration that may be given to the members of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs. The fact is that the State Department and the War Department, for whatever their objection may be worth, stand in positive opposition to the pending legislation. They may be wrong. They are wrong in the view of my colleagues on the committee. Whether they are wrong or not, however, they have submitted profoundly persuasive reasons for the position they have taken, and in some degree and in some respects I heartily share the viewpoint which they have thus expressed. It would scarcely be candid to brush their recommendations contemptuously aside.

I believe, with all the sincerity at my command, that it would be a tragedy for us to proceed upon this adventure as it is written in this pending measure. Despite that fact, I am of the opinion that the pending measure could be brought within some degree of reasonable acceptance by certain amendments which I am proposing to continue to submit. Those amendments can be dispatched, Mr. President, as promptly as the Senate pleases. I have taken none of the Senate's time in any prolonged discussion of any of these amendments. I shall content myself with the briefest résumé of the reasons which move me to submit them. Then, when they shall have been dispatched, I shall present the completed substitute which represents the theory upon which I have approached this problem and upon which I believe the Philippine Islands will reach their permanent independence not only sooner but more safely than under any other theory now pending in this body.

I shall undertake to submit to the Senate the reasons why I think that substitute is preferable. I shall do it with all the brevity possible. I shall not undertake, directly or indirectly, to contribute to delay any legislation at this hour in the Senate's proceedings, but I repeat, Mr. President, that the suggestions which I am bringing to the attention of the Senate are submitted in utter good faith, and I should be greatly disappointed if any colleague should seriously have any other view.

Let there be no mistake, Mr. President, about my attitude. I again summarize it categorically. I favor action at the present session of the Congress in behalf of Philippine independence. The Filipinos deserve to have immediate implements supplied to develop our promise in the Jones preamble of 1916. These implements should be sound and dependable. We of the United States are entitled to restrict immigration and imports in this connection. They of the Philippines need these same restrictions in order to develop self-sufficiency such as must be sustained when actual independence comes. Meanwhile, so long as American sovereignty continues at Manila, so long as American responsibility persists, there must be unimpaired American authority. We dare not be an absentee landlord 10,000 miles from home.

Let there be no mistake, Mr. President, about the fact that I am trying to hasten these objectives. Lest self-serving inferences may have invited a different interpretation of my purpose, let the record show that in point of ultimate time my substitute proposal runs but four years longer to its maturity than does the pending measure. Meanwhile, it begins its limitations upon Philippine imports five years sooner than does the pending bill. It provides a more temperate and practical progression in these limitations, yet arrives at larger limitations than the pending bill. It stops immigration precisely as does the pending bill. It immediately enlarges native autonomy, although this is scarcely a serious matter because the Philippines already are 98 per cent autonomous. It leads to the absolute assurance of a plebiscite. It transfers to the Filipinos the complete mastery of their own ultimate destiny. Shall any Senator pretend that this is inimical to the cause of independence? Let him be answered by my statement that I am willing to vote at this moment for the substitute and to have it become immediate law.

The fundamental difference, Mr. President, is that the substitute puts the new Philippine constitution at the end instead of at the beginning of the period of preparation which under either bill involves about two decades. It insists that so long as American sovereignty remains, American authority shall serve it. This spells no imposition upon the natives, because, I repeat, they already have 98 per cent of political autonomy. On the contrary it is an additional warrant that the new republic, when established, shall not fall. For America it involves a basic philosophy which I decline to desert.

I want action. My substitute represents action. The Senate has been officially notified that the War Department favors it as among all pending measures. I want a bill that can complete its legislative and executive journey and become a law. Pending decision upon my substitute, I offer the amendments to the pending text which will at least help it to trend in this direction.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, assuming that the vote just taken by the Senate expresses its unwillingness to change the economic structure embraced in the Hawes-Cutting bill, I shall not undertake to submit the supplemental amendment which was prepared and printed dealing with the economic portion of the program. Now, however, I want to submit an amendment dealing with another phase of the matter, and if I may have the attention of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] I shall hope to interest him in the philosophy of this proposal.

I send to the desk an amendment which I ask may be read.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be stated.

THE CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 39, after line 20, to insert a new paragraph reading as follows:

Sec. —. That the bonds and other obligations of the Philippine Government or of the provincial and municipal governments thereof, hereafter issued during the continuance of United States sovereignty in the Philippine Islands, shall specifically provide that there is no obligation, moral or legal, on the part of the United States to meet the interest or principal of such bonds or obligations: Provided, That such bonds and obligations hereafter issued shall not be exempt from taxation in the United States or by authority of the United States: And provided further, That no such obligations shall be contracted in foreign countries without the prior approval of the President of the United States, nor shall the proceeds of any such obligations contracted in foreign countries be applied, without such approval, to purposes other than the retirement of existing obligations of the Philippine Government, or the provincial and municipal governments thereof, heretofore issued under authority of some act of Congress of the United States.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

MR. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am very glad also to invite the attention of the senior Senator from Missouri

[Mr. HAWES] to this amendment. He was not in the Chamber at the moment when I previously spoke.

Mr. President, there is at best a somewhat difficult and perplexing problem involved in the mixed fiscal responsibilities and obligations of the Philippine Islands and the United States. While it is true that none of the obligations of the Philippine Islands bear the legal imprint and warrant of the Government of the United States, the Attorney General of the United States, in a formal decision a number of years ago, insisted that there is a specific moral obligation on the part of the Government of the United States in respect of such securities as have been issued by the Philippine Islands and their various subdivisions of government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Upon what theory did the Attorney General arrive at that conclusion?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have not his opinion at hand. It was first called to my attention by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], and I should be very happy to ask him if he remembers the theory upon which the Attorney General of the United States, in a formal decision, which the Senator from Pennsylvania will recall, declared that there is a binding moral obligation upon the United States behind certain of these Philippine fiscal obligations?

Mr. REED. Yes; that is true, Mr. President. There is not any formal guaranty by the United States Government, but more than 20 years ago—probably 25 years ago—there was a ruling of the Attorney General to the effect that, while there existed no formal legal guaranty, there seemed to him to be a clear moral responsibility resting upon us who had authorized the issuance of the bonds to see that they were paid; and those bonds have been sold generally throughout the United States since that time with never a syllable of contradiction by anybody of that expressed opinion of the Attorney General. If it is possible for the Government to assume an implied obligation of that sort, then certainly it assumed it in that case.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is my understanding of the situation. It is a situation freighted with contingent liabilities, which should not persist under this new and virtually independent Philippine government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know how the Government of the United States could assume a moral obligation with reference to securities of that kind.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is my understanding that much of the financing of the Philippine Islands and some of its subdivisions is done directly through the Bureau of Insular Affairs in the War Department here in Washington, that bureau acting virtually as the fiscal agent for the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is true.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And obviously that situation, right or wrong, would invite the interpretation to which the Senator from Pennsylvania has referred.

Mr. BINGHAM. New issues of bonds are nearly always advertised by the War Department for the Philippine government.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I know that is true, but they were simply acting as fiscal agents of the Philippine Islands, to accomplish a certain purpose, and anyone purchasing the bonds would have to determine who was responsible for the bonds, and there would be no legal obligation. Therefore, if the Government did nothing more than act as fiscal agent and assist in putting the bonds upon the market, I do not see how there could be any moral obligation on its part.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, whether there be a legal or a moral obligation or not, I announce the fact that the Attorney General gave a decision of that character, and I come to the conclusion that such a situation should not be permitted to continue under the new arrangement under any circumstances.

Mr. BORAH. Who was the Attorney General?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am unable to answer that question.

Mr. REED. I have forgotten who the Attorney General then was.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is quite obvious that the people who purchased such bonds believed that the Attorney General was correct, because the bonds have been selling at a rate comparable only to securities behind which is the credit of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. I would like to know, for my own satisfaction, what is the moral obligation of the United States? How can the Government of the United States become responsible or assume a moral obligation under such circumstances?

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is the circumstance of sale and distribution to which I have referred, and the nature of the relationship between the islands and the United States, which provide the only possible reason I could give the Senator; but I say to the Senator that I cordially concur in what seems to be his inferential position, that no such thing should exist and that there should be no fiscal obligations upon the United States that are either moral or indirect unless they are written into the bond.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does not the Senator agree with me that most of the persons who have purchased those bonds through the fiscal agent of the Philippine Islands, namely, through the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department, have by the very fact of the price they are willing to pay for them made evident their belief that they were guaranteed by the United States?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the price is conclusive proof that the purchaser thinks he had a warrant.

Mr. BORAH. We certainly are not responsible for the ignorance of the purchaser.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. Having in mind the opinion of the Attorney General referred to—and I must say frankly the opinion of others—that our Government, because of the control it has maintained over the fiscal system of the Philippine Islands, through its banks, through the issuance of its bonds, through the sale of its bonds, through the power of veto of the issuance of bonds, and the power to veto the sale of bonds, has assumed a certain obligation, yet one might infer from the amendment offered by the Senator that there is no protection in this bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Senator has anticipated my statement; I certainly intended to leave no such inference, and I am coming now to the precise part of the bill to which the Senator is about to advert. I am perfectly willing to have him make his statement, but I do not want him to think that I intended to overlook the provision to which he is about to refer.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was going to see if we had not done that, if I may say so. For instance, there are the provisions as to the public debt and obligations which it is made mandatory shall be placed in the constitution of the Philippine Islands or, if not in the constitution, then in the statutes of the Philippine Islands, which shall have the same effect.

Then there is the provision found on page 31 of the bill, being the second paragraph of section 7, containing provisions with regard to the obligations assumed by the government of the Philippine Islands:

(2) The President of the United States shall have authority to suspend the taking effect of or the operation of any law, contract, or executive order of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, which in his judgment will result in a failure of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands to fulfill its contracts, or to meet its bonded indebtedness and interest thereon or to provide for its sinking funds, or which seems likely to impair the reserves for the protection of the currency of the Philippine Islands, or which in his judgment will violate international obligations of the United States.

The President shall also have authority to take such action as, in his judgment, may be necessary in pursuance of the right of intervention reserved under paragraph (n), section 2, of this act.

If the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands fails to pay any of its bonded or other indebtedness or the interest thereon when due or to fulfill any of its contracts, the United States high commissioner shall immediately report the facts to the President, who may thereupon direct the high commissioner to take over the customs offices and administration of the same, administer the same, and apply such part of the revenue received therefrom as may be necessary for the payment of such overdue indebtedness or for the fulfillment of such contracts.

Now, here is something additional. That is under the new autonomous government. Here is the safeguard. There is an absolute supervision under this bill over their issuance of obligations. They are under that control; but what we wanted in this bill was to provide a revenue so that that question would not arise, so that there would not be any doubt as to the validity of their bonds. So what did we do? We provided on page 29, under section (e), this:

The government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands shall impose and collect an export tax on all articles that may be exported to the United States from the Philippine Islands free of duty under the provisions of existing law as modified by the foregoing provisions of this section, including the articles enumerated in subdivisions (a), (b), and (c), within the limitations therein specified, as follows:

Then the bill goes on, and specifies one after the other.

The government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands shall place all funds received from such export taxes in a sinking fund, and such fund shall, in addition to other moneys available for that purpose, be applied solely to the payment of the principal and interest on the bonded indebtedness of the Philippine Islands, its Provinces, municipalities, and instrumentalities, until such indebtedness has been fully discharged.

Under that fiscal plan it is admitted by all of the experts who have testified on this question that that fund will pay off every dollar of the Philippine indebtedness before the period of independence. We have not only provided a fund for them which is not provided in the Senator's bill, we have not only guaranteed their independence but we have by their own consent placed it in the power of the President to suspend any act that threatens a violation of that credit or the failure to accumulate the sinking fund; and they can take charge of the customs, if they want to, and enforce the collection of those export taxes.

The Senator's bill has this in mind: The Senator's bill does not anticipate an autonomous government. It anticipates a power to become independent at the end of 20 years.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I reclaim the floor just long enough to suggest to the Senator that I am discussing an amendment to the pending text, and not the substitute, at the present time, and that the amendment which I submit is supplemental to all of these other protections to which the Senator has referred—protections which I entirely agree are worthy and justified and sound. I am simply submitting to the Senate that they do not go far enough, and should be supplemented as I now indicate.

Mr. PITTMAN. We must do one of two things: We must either let the Philippines control their own economic conditions in the manner we have described here, or we must take charge of the whole situation. If, under the Senator's amendment, we are to declare to the world that the United States has not any legal or moral responsibility whatever as to their securities, and yet we are going to keep them under our sovereignty and under our domination, with no increased autonomous government, we are practically committing political murder against them.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then, may I ask the Senator if it is his conception of the situation that there will be a continuing fiscal responsibility upon the Government of the United States in respect to subsequent securities issued by the Philippine Commonwealth?

Mr. PITTMAN. Undoubtedly there will be just the same as there is now, except that we have taken the precaution to offer a great many protections with regard to those securities that are not taken now.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator's statement only emphasizes the necessity for the amendment which I have submitted. If there has been any misunderstanding heretofore respecting the precise nature of the responsibility of the Government of the United States for the financing of the Philippine Islands and their subdivisions, and if there is any remote danger that that misunderstanding will persist and continue under this new set-up, then, I think it is most emphatically wise to make it plain, here and now, that there is no such obligation. The situation which will exist under the new set-up is a totally different thing from the situation which has existed heretofore. Even if this moral fiscal obligation may have been justified heretofore, I can not see that it would be justified hereafter, in view of the fact that we are undertaking to establish an autonomous unit of government which is supposed to be able to handle its own problems and which presumably is preparing itself for a complete autonomy in which there shall remain no element of American reliance or stewardship.

What does this amendment provide? Simply that the bonds and other obligations of the Philippine government, or of the provincial and municipal governments thereof, hereafter issued during the continuance of United States sovereignty in the Philippine Islands, shall specifically provide that there is no obligation, moral or legal, on the part of the United States to meet the interest or principal of such bonds or obligations. That is a recital of a fact. There can be no question but that that is the recital of a fact; yet neither can there be any question that the fact is at variance with the common understanding of American investors during the past 20 years. I think the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM], the chairman of the committee, will concede that point. Sooner or later, whatever our relationships may be, there certainly must be a dividing line upon this fiscal responsibility which the United States carries. Certainly the place to provide it is in the charter of a new Philippine Commonwealth. Furthermore, I know of no reason why, under a new set-up of this character, the securities of a quasi-independent government, virtually external to the Government of the United States, should enjoy tax-exemption privileges within the United States. We have too many tax-exempt securities already.

Let us be consistent in our policy. If we are going to establish this experiment—and establish it, I hope, with all the blessings of success that our prayers can give it—if we are going to establish it, let us make the relationship specific and absolutely understood as between the sovereignty which we retain, the sovereignty which we transfer, and the sovereignty which is to be exercised by both of us.

I have repeatedly complained heretofore against that phase of the bill which provides a constitution at the beginning of the preparatory independence period instead of at the end, because it seems to me, as I said on yesterday, that this means that we neither leave the flag up nor take the flag down. We leave it at a sort of half-mast; and a flag at half-mast involves implications which I do not enjoy.

Here is another of those twilight zones where the responsibility of one group merges into the responsibility of another group, and no one knows the dividing line. The amendment recites the fact—I emphasize the word "fact"—it recites the fact that we have ceased to be responsible, even indirectly, for these fiscal obligations. Why should not the fact be recited, in common honesty to the American investor and in fairness to the Philippine Commonwealth itself, so that there may be absolutely no misunderstanding as to whose credit is involved in these future funding operations?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. With a great deal of what the Senator has said I am in accord, and with the first part of his amendment I have no particular quarrel; but I call his attention to the fact that in his final proviso he says to the new Philippine Commonwealth, "You may not issue any bonds unless the President of the United States gives you the permission to do it," whereby on the one hand he says that the United States will not be responsible at all and that no one can say there is any moral obligation, and on the other hand he says that the President of the United States will have to give his approval of the issue of these bonds; and the investor, seeing in the advertisement that the President of the United States has approved the issue of these bonds and not knowing the first part of it, will be misled. The Senator is trying to give the Philippines independence in connection with their fiscal relations and at the same time keep them in leading strings.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator's point is perfectly well taken. When I read over the amendment this morning in its printed form it occurred to me that there was this clash between the two sections, and I had intended to withdraw the latter paragraph before the amendment was submitted. I now do perfect my amendment by putting a period after the word "United States," on line 2 of page 2, and striking out the balance of the amendment.

FIDUCIARY POWERS OF BANKS

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, on June 27 identical measures, House bill 8694, and Senate bill 4851, were passed, giving the Comptroller of the Currency certain additional powers.

Both measures were passed, but I find that in printing the Senate bill an error was made with reference to the section to be amended. The Senate bill was entitled, "An act to amend section 5202," but it should agree with the wording of the title of the House bill, "To amend section 5240." It is a printer's error. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill, which is identical with the Senate bill, with the exception of this slight printer's error in the title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Connecticut?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider House bill 8694, to amend section 5240, United States Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, ch. 3, secs. 481, 482, 483, 484, 485), and for other purposes, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5240, United States Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, ch. 3, secs. 481, 482, 483, 484, 485), be amended by adding thereto a new paragraph reading: "In addition to the expense of examination to be assessed by the Comptroller of the Currency as heretofore provided, all national banks exercising fiduciary powers under the provisions of section 11 (k) of the Federal reserve act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, ch. 3, sec. 248 (k)), and all banks or trust companies exercising fiduciary powers in the District of Columbia shall be assessed by the Comptroller of the Currency for the examinations of such fiduciary powers, a fee in proportion to the amount of individual trust assets under administration and the total bonds and/or notes outstanding under corporate bond and/or note issues for which the banks or trust companies are acting as trustees upon the dates of examination of the various banks or trust companies."

GRAND CENTRAL STATION POST OFFICE, NEW YORK

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12360, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into a contract to purchase the parcel of land and the building known as the Grand Central Station Post Office and Office Building, No. 452 Lexington Avenue, in the city, county, and State of New York, for post-office and other governmental purposes, and to pay the purchase price therefor on or prior to June 30, 1937.

This bill was objected to two or three days ago by the Senator from Pennsylvania when it was reached on the calendar. He wishes to offer an amendment to the bill; and since it has to be amended and go back to the House for action, and in view of the shortness of the time, it should be considered now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. What is the nature of the request—that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; so that Calendar 909 may be considered.

Mr. McNARY. So that if it leads to unusual debate the unfinished business may be resumed?

Mr. COPELAND. Of course.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection, if it takes that form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it was I who objected to this bill when it was reached on the calendar last Monday. It seemed to me that, compared with the rental now being paid, the upset figure here, the limiting figure, was excessive, and that we would be buying the land on about a 2 per cent basis.

I have since consulted the Treasury, and have also been approached by representatives of the present owners of the property, and they have cleared up my misunderstanding. I find that it is proposed to acquire a considerable amount of property, more than is covered by the present lease.

The building now on the land is worth somewhere around two and a half million dollars apparently. The restorations and repairs and remodeling that would be required would cost somewhere between half a million and a million dollars, the Treasury's estimate being higher than those of the owners. That accounts for perhaps $3,000,000.

Sixty thousand square feet of land are involved, and I am told that three of the most reputable appraisers of New York have estimated the value of that land as being about $200 a square foot. I have no method of knowing whether that is moderate or inadequate or excessive. I am sure the Senator from New York himself does not wish to pose as a real-estate expert.

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly not.

Mr. REED. If that is a reasonable estimate, then this is not an unreasonable limiting figure; but that will have to depend on negotiations and investigations to be carried on by the Treasury Department.

Mr. COPELAND. As provided in the bill?

Mr. REED. As provided in the bill. I do feel, however, that even on the figures submitted by the owner, the limiting figure is about a million dollars too high, and therefore I move to amend the bill on page 2, line 22, by striking out "$15,500,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$14,500,000."

I am advised that those who have been urging the bill will not contest that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract to purchase on behalf of the United States the parcel of land with the building thereon located in the city, county, and State of New York, bounded by the westerly line of Lexington Avenue, the southerly line of Forty-fifth Street, a line parallel with and distant 275 feet, more or less, westerly of the westerly line of Lexington Avenue and a line parallel with and distant 220 feet 9½ inches, more or less, southerly of the southerly line of Forty-fifth Street, for a post-office building and/or for other governmental purposes, subject to the exception and reservation to the New York Central Railroad Co., its successors and assigns, of the perpetual rights of exclusive use for railroad station, terminal, and other purposes of the railroad company, its successors and assigns, of the subsurface of said parcel to be specifically defined in the instrument of conveyance with the necessary ventilating shafts; and subject also to exceptions and reservations for purposes of light, air, and support in favor of said subsurface and the southerly and westerly adjoining premises, all as may be agreed upon in advance by the respective parties to the conveyance of title to the United States: Provided, however, That the total limit of cost to the United States of such parcel of land and building, including the cost of any necessary remodeling of said building, shall not exceed the sum of $14,- 500,000 and interest: Provided further, That the contract of purchase, if made, shall provide for the conveyance to the United States of title to said property on or prior to January 1, 1933, and for the payment of the agreed purchase price of said property on June 30, 1937, except that the Treasury Department, at its election, may pay any part of the agreed purchase price prior to said date, and except that commencing on the date of the conveyance of title to said property to the United States and continuing until January 1, 1934, there shall be paid each month to be applied on account of the agreed purchase price a sum not in excess of the aggregate monthly rental now paid by the Post Office Department for the spaces occupied by the Post Office Department in said building and in the adjacent buildings to the north and south, and except that commencing on January 1, 1934, and continuing to the date of the full payment of the agreed purchase price there shall be paid each month, to be applied on account of the agreed purchase price as aforesaid, a sum not less than one-twelfth of the product arrived at by multiplying the aggregate square-foot area of the spaces now occupied by the Post Office Department in said building and in the adjacent buildings to the north and south, by a rate per square foot to be agreed upon by the owner and the Secretary of the Treasury, not in excess of $2.50 per square foot and not less than the average rental per square foot now payable by the Post Office Department under the present leases of the spaces occupied by the Post Office Department in the said building and in the adjacent buildings to the north and south: Provided further, That any appropriations made or hereafter made to the Post Office Department for the payment of rent under the leases now in effect and hereinbefore mentioned shall, upon the conveyance of title to the United States, be available to the Secretary of the Treasury for the aforesaid monthly payments on account of the purchase price: Provided further, That the Treasury Department at the date of its payment of the full purchase price shall pay interest upon the unpaid balances of said purchase price to be computed from the date of the conveyance of title to said property to the date of the payment of the full purchase price at a rate not in excess of 4 per cent per annum to be agreed upon by the owner and the Secretary of the Treasury: And provided further, That all other terms and conditions in connection with the purchase of said property shall be in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

PURCHASING POWER OF THE DOLLAR

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, day before yesterday, when the calendar was being called, Order of Business 809, House bill 11499, for restoring and maintaining the purchasing power of the dollar, was reached, and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] objected to its consideration. I wonder whether the Senator from Pennsylvania would be willing to permit this bill to be passed and go to conference. It is a substitute for what is known as the Goldsborough bill. It provides for a very limited expansion of the currency. The Committee on Banking and Currency reported to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert this language:

That notwithstanding any provisions of law prohibiting bonds of the United States from bearing the circulation privilege, for a period of five years from the date of enactment of this act all outstanding bonds of the United States heretofore issued or issued during such period shall be receivable by the Treasurer of the United States as security for the issuance of circulating notes to national banking associations, and upon the deposit with the Treasurer of the United States by a national banking association of any such bonds, such association shall be entitled to receive circulating notes in the same manner and to the same extent and subject to the same conditions and limitations now provided by law in the case of 2 per cent gold bonds of the United States bearing the circulation privilege; except that the limitation contained in section 9 of the act of July 12, 1882, as amended, with respect to the amount of lawful money which may be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States by national banking associations for the purpose of withdrawing bonds held as security for their circulating notes, shall not apply to the bonds of the United States to which the circulation privilege is extended by this act and which are held as security for such notes. Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to modify, amend, or repeal any law relating to bonds of the United States which now bear the circulation privilege.

SEC. 2. As used in this act, the word "bonds" shall not include notes, certificates, or bills issued by the United States.

SEC. 3. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Of course, I do not want to take the time from the bill now pending, if there is going to be any debate; but unless the bill goes to conference shortly, we can not hope to do anything this session. I think it an exceedingly important matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, this is what this bill would mean: There were outstanding at the close of the last fiscal year, that is, one year ago today, $3,201,000,000 worth of Liberty bonds, unmatured, and there were outstanding $4,552,000,000 worth of Treasury bonds, a total of $12,753,000,000 worth of Liberty and Treasury bonds.

It is true that only about one billion of them are held by the banks which would be given the circulation privilege, but every one of that $12,700,000,000 worth of bonds would be available for issues of new circulation, if they were acquired, as many of them would be, by the banks.

The bill proposes an inflation of the currency based on nothing but Government promises, which is beyond anything contemplated in either the Goldsborough bill, the Patman bill, or any other of the inflationary bills that have been introduced. I feel so sure that its effects would be hopelessly devastating upon the currency situation of the United States that I am reluctantly compelled to say no to the Senator's request.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, upon to-morrow I will undertake to move that this be taken up. I will not stop to argue it now. I can not do so at length, since I can not ask for further time.

Mr. REED. At this point I would like to put into the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury with regard to a proposed issue of 2 per cent new bonds to bear the circulation privilege. While that does not relate to this much larger proposal carried in the bill referred to by the Senator from Idaho, it does discuss the effect of any issue of new bonds having the circulation privilege, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the amount of the issue to which the Senator is now referring?

Mr. REED. The Secretary does not state in his letter. He speaks of a proposal offered on the floor of the Senate to authorize the issuance of 2 per cent bonds bearing the circulation privilege. That was an amendment, as I recall it, which was offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], although I am not absolutely certain as to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

Washington, June 24, 1932.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I understand that a proposal has been offered on the floor of the Senate to authorize the issuance of 2 per cent bonds bearing the circulation privilege, for the purpose of financing the additional operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Apparently it is intended by this proposal to make possible a large volume of Treasury borrowing at a lower rate of interest than could be employed in the sale of long-term Government securities on a purely investment basis. Presumably it is expected that the sale of bonds bearing the circulation privilege would result in an increase in the amount of currency in circulation with a beneficial effect on prevailing economic conditions. The suggested provision for the issuance of additional currency is in my opinion unnecessary and would unsettle our existing currency system.

Under the operation of the Federal reserve system the volume of currency in circulation is determined by the currency needs of the country, which in ordinary times depend largely upon such factors as the volume of retail trade, pay rolls, etc. The currency facilities of the Federal reserve system are entirely adequate to the country's needs. Currency has been made available in volume sufficient not only to meet the demands of business but to meet the unusual currency demand which has been experienced during the past year and a half as a result of hoarding. At the present time there is about $5,505,000,000 of currency in circulation. This total is about $770,000,000 larger than a year ago and about $1,080,000,000 larger than at the end of June, 1929. The Federal reserve banks are in a position to meet still further demands for additional currency, if necessary. Our interest at this time is not in the addition of more currency to amounts already in circulation but rather in the return flow of idle funds from hoarding back into active employment in the banking system.

Since the organization of the Federal reserve system the issue of United States Government obligations bearing the circulation privilege has been opposed by the Treasury for the reason that the Federal reserve act set up the mechanism by which the total volume of currency in circulation is currently adjusted to changing needs. Under that legislation responsibility for providing for the currency requirements of the Nation has been centered in the Federal reserve system, and the country's currency has been made available chiefly through the currency operations of the Federal reserve banks.

The Treasury is opposed to the issuance of additional securities bearing the circulation privilege, on the ground that further provision for the issuance of currency is unnecessary; it believes that resort to this device in order to reduce the rate on the proposed security issue would be unjustified and harmful.

Very truly yours,

A. A. BALLANTINE,
Under Secretary of the Treasury.

HON. DAVID A. REED,
United States Senate.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7233) to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, I do not believe this amendment is necessary. I think the committee covered that situation with very great care. But I shall not object to the amendment as the Senator has revised it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Missouri for his consideration. I am particularly happy about it because one of my unkind critics a few hours ago on the floor of the Senate said that none of my amendments was offered with the slightest expectation that it would ever get into the bill. I have now offered three, and two of them are in the bill, so I am doing better than Schmeling did to Sharkey, anyway.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, no amendment which the Senator has offered, which tries to inject his own peculiar philosophy into this bill, has been put into the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I now want to turn to page 27, section 5, of the bill, which relates to the transfer of property and rights to the Philippine Commonwealth. I had an amendment printed last night dealing with this subject, but I want to take the liberty of changing its wording somewhat, because I think the wording as originally proposed could be improved. But I think the Senate will have no difficulty in following me as I read it.

Mr. BINGHAM. To what copy of the bill is the Senator referring?

Mr. VANDENBERG. To House bill 7233, before the reprint.

On page 27, line 7, before the verb "designated," I move to insert the words "or may be hereafter."

Mr. PITTMAN. What section is that?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Section 5, page 27, dealing with the transfer of property and rights to the Philippine Commonwealth. I am moving on line 7, preceding the word "designated," to insert the words "or may be hereafter," and in the same connection, and to be considered en bloc, because they are related, in line 12, preceding the word "government," to insert the word "independent," and to strike out the words "the Commonwealth of," so that the section would read as follows:

Sec. 5. All the property and rights which may have been acquired in the Philippine Islands by the United States under the treaties mentioned in the first section of this act, except such land or other property as has heretofore been, or may be hereafter, designated by the President of the United States for military and other reservations of the Government of the United States, and except such land or other property or rights or interests therein as may have been sold or otherwise disposed of in accordance with law, are hereby granted to the independent government of the Philippine Islands when constituted.

This raises two points, and I can submit them very briefly.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before the Senator gets to that, the last point raised by the Senator was with regard to our obligation on these Philippine bonds, and it has taken some time to find it, but we have finally located the opinion of the Department of Justice to which the Senator referred. Perhaps it might be wise to put it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in connection with the discussion of the amendment which was last adopted.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I most certainly think it would be; and I wish the Senator would indicate now, for the information of the Senate, who rendered the decision and when.

Mr. REED. The decision was rendered by Henry M. Hoyt, Solicitor General, and approved by P. C. Knox, Secretary of War, and is dated "Department of Justice, December 26, 1903." I ask unanimous consent that the entire opinion may be placed in the RECORD in connection with the discussion of the last amendment which was adopted, and for the information of the Senate at this moment I would like to read two sentences:

The pledge of the faith and credit of the Philippine Government, covering the due application of the proceeds of the loan and the maintenance of the sinking fund, rests, then, upon authority explicitly conferred by the national power; and while in the strict and legal sense the faith of the United States is not pledged as a guaranty for the payment of the loan, or for the due use of the proceeds or the observance of the sinking-fund requirements, the entire transaction is to be negotiated under the auspices of the United States, and by its recognition and aid. The assumption is, therefore, conclusive and necessary that the terms of the statute as to the application of the moneys realized from the sale of the bonds, and as to all moneys realized from disposition of the lands, and as to the sinking fund so created, will be strictly followed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania is granted.

The opinion is as follows:

PHILIPPINE LAND-PURCHASE BONDS

The issue and form of bonds proposed by the Secretary of War for carrying out the provisions of sections 63, 64, and 65 of the Philippine civil government act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. 706, 707), are in strict conformity with the statute and are legal in all respects.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
December 26, 1903.

SIR: In your letter of December 24 you cite sections 63, 64, and 65 of the Philippine civil government act of July 1, 1902, and state that under that legislation the Philippine Government has agreed to purchase certain large parcels of land owned by religious orders or other associations, and, for the purpose of providing funds to acquire such lands, is about to borrow money and to issue $7,200,000 of registered 4 per cent bonds redeemable at the pleasure of said government after 10 years from the date of issue and payable 30 years from said date. You inclose a draft of the proposed bond, and request an opinion upon the legality of the issue and of the form of bond.

The law in question (32 Stat., 706, 707) provides:

"Sec. 63. That the government of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized, subject to the limitations and conditions prescribed in this act, to acquire, receive, hold, maintain, and convey title to real and personal property, and may acquire real estate for public uses by the exercise of the right of eminent domain.

"Sec. 64. That the powers hereinbefore conferred in section 63 may also be exercised in respect of any lands, easements, appurtenances, and hereditaments which, on the 13th of August, 1898, were owned or held by associations, corporations, communities, religious orders, or private individuals in such large tracts or parcels and in such manner as in the opinion of the commission injuriously to affect the peace and welfare of the people of the Philippine Islands. And for the purpose of providing funds to acquire the lands mentioned in this section said government of the Philippine Islands is hereby empowered to incur indebtedness, to borrow money, and to issue, and to sell at not less than par value, in gold coin of the United States of the present standard value or the equivalent in value in money of said islands, upon such terms and conditions as it may deem best, registered or coupon bonds of said government for such amount as may be necessary, said bonds to be in denominations of $50 or any multiple thereof, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 4½ per cent per annum, payable quarterly, and to be payable at the pleasure of said government after dates named in said bonds not less than 5 nor more than 30 years from the date of their issue, together with interest thereon, in gold coin of the United States of the present standard value or the equivalent in value in money of said islands; and said bonds shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of said government, or any local authority therein, or of the Government of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority in the United States or the Philippine Islands. The moneys which may be realized or received from the issue and sale of said bonds shall be applied by the government of the Philippine Islands to the acquisition of the property authorized by this section, and to no other purposes.

"SEC. 65. That all lands acquired by virtue of the preceding section shall constitute a part and portion of the public property of the government of the Philippine Islands, and may be held, sold, and conveyed, or leased temporarily for a period not exceeding three years after their acquisition by said government on such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act: Provided, That all deferred payments and the interest thereon shall be payable in the money prescribed for the payment of principal and interest of the bonds authorized to be issued in payment of said lands by the preceding section and said deferred payments shall bear interest at the rate borne by the bonds. All moneys realized or received from sales or other disposition of said lands, or by reason thereof, shall constitute a trust fund for the payment of principal and interest of said bonds, and also constitute a sinking fund for the payment of said bonds at their maturity. Actual settlers and occupants at the time said lands are acquired by the government shall have the preference over all others to lease, purchase, or acquire their holdings within such reasonable time as may be determined by said government."

The proposed form of bond is as follows:

"The government of the Philippine Islands is indebted unto _____ or assigns, in the sum of $1,000.

"This bond is issued in accordance with the provisions of section 64 of an act of Congress entitled 'An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,' approved July 1, 1902, and an act of the Philippine Commission, No. _____, enacted _____, and is redeemable at the pleasure of the Philippine government after February 1, 1914, and payable February 1, 1934, with interest from the date hereof at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, payable quarterly on the first days of May, August, November, and February of each year. Both principal and interest are payable at the office of the Treasury or of the sub-treasuries of the United States, in gold coin of the United States of the present standard value, and are exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the government of the Philippine Islands or any local authority therein or of the Government of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority in the United States or the Philippine Islands."

It is evident at the outset, on the face of the proposed bonds, that they will be issued in general "in accordance with the provisions of section 64." This is an assurance by the responsible authorities that the conditions of the law have been and will be fully observed. The express terms of the bond show strict compliance with all the statutory conditions which the obligation itself must or naturally would incorporate and enumerate. And your letter states that the contract for the purchase of the lands relates to large tracts or parcels held under the defined ownership "in such manner, as in the opinion of the commission [the Philippine Commission] to seriously affect the peace and welfare of the people of the Philippine Islands."

It is to be observed that the bonds must be sold at not less than par value, in gold coin of the United States of the present standard value, or the equivalent in value of the money of the Philippine Islands. Conformity to this further condition is manifestly and necessarily contemplated by yourself and the authorities of the Philippine government.

It is further to be observed that the law explicitly restricts the application of the proceeds of the loan to the purpose of the acquisition of the property authorized and creates a trust and sinking fund for the payment of the principal and interest of the bonds. As with Government and municipal loans in general, similarly authorized and conditioned, the reliance of purchasers of the bonds for protection and security is upon the statutory grant of authority and upon the credit and responsibility of the governmental obligor supported by its property and assets. In this case the lands to be acquired will constitute by express enactment a portion of the public property of the Philippine government, and all moneys realized from disposition of the lands will form a sinking fund for the bonds. The pledge of the faith and credit of the Philippine government, covering the due application of the proceeds of the loan and the maintenance of the sinking fund, rests, then, upon authority explicitly conferred by the national power; and while in the strict and legal sense the faith of the United States is not pledged as a guaranty for the payment of the loan or for the due use of the proceeds or the observance of the sinking-fund requirements, the entire transaction is to be negotiated under the auspices of the United States, and by its recognition and aid. The assumption is, therefore, conclusive and necessary that the terms of the statute as to the application of the moneys realized from the sale of the bonds, and as to all moneys realized from disposition of the lands, and as to the sinking fund so created, will be strictly followed.

I have the honor thus to suggest, outside your precise query, that I see no reason for any legal doubt of the adequacy or extent of the protection and security given to the purchasers of the bonds; and on the whole case, and in response to your particular inquiry, I have the honor to say that I am clear in the opinion that the issue of bonds, and the form of bond proposed, are in strict conformity with the statute, and are legal in all respects.

Very respectfully,

HENRY M. HOYT, Solicitor General.

Approved:

P. C. KNOX,
The Secretary of War.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, may I comment on the decision just referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield for that purpose?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thoroughly concur in the opinion and have held that view throughout in the preparation of the pending bill. No matter what bill we pass, whether it is the substitute of the Senator from Michigan or the substitute reported by the committee, we can not shake off the moral obligation by a declaration that we have not any. We have a moral obligation in the Philippine Islands until they become independent. We have more of a moral obligation over their finances when we insist now, always have insisted, and will in this bill insist upon supervising their fiscal affairs. Therefore I never would have voted and I did not vote for the Senator's amendment for two reasons. No one contends that we have any legal obligation, so it is not necessary to put it in the bill, and the declaration that we have not any moral obligation is untrue.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, returning to section 5 on page 27 of my pending amendment, which I shall very briefly discuss, the section as drawn and as now pending in the Hawes-Cutting bill—and I particularly would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee to this phase of the discussion, if I may—absolutely confines any subsequent property rights of the United States to land or property which has heretofore been designated by the President of the United States for military and other reservations of the Government, and so forth. The point I submit—

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; not now. I will yield in a few moments.

The point I want to submit particularly to the judgment of the Senator from Connecticut, because of his great familiarity with this phase of the problem, is whether in a contemplated ultimate separation, which is 17 years remote, we should foreclose ourselves as a matter of right to any subsequent choice or designation or selection of other or alternative military or other reservations for the Government of the United States in the years to come. Would we not be wholly within our rights and infinitely more within our wisdom if we retain for ourselves a right of subsequent designation instead of limiting ourselves completely and totally to designations heretofore made? Before the Senator answers, perhaps, if he will permit me to amplify very briefly what I have said, he will be in accurate possession of my thought.

This section also undertakes to make this property transfer when the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands is instituted, which is to say at the beginning of the 17-year period. In other words, we are transferring property rights from the United States to the tentative Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands before we know whether the Commonwealth ultimately will graduate into permanence and before we know whether in the absence of that ultimate permanence the property may not revert to us. In the climax, however, of the relationship between the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands and the Government of the United States, assuming that the entire program has been a success and that the adventure is developing satisfactorily, and assuming that the ultimate plebescite is favorable and 17 years from to-day the flag of the United States may be taken down and the flag of the Philippine Republic may be raised, is it not possible that at that distant day, 17 years hence, instead of a naval or military reservation, let us say, at Cavite, instead of, let us say, a military reservation upon Corregidor, which is related almost exclusively to the defense of the city of Manila, suppose we should prefer a different and a concentrated base elsewhere in the Philippine Islands? Should we not have at least an unforeclosed opportunity to make a subsequent expansion or trade in the property which is to be transferred and therefore should not the transfer await the successful establishment of the Philippine Republic so that the problem can be dealt with conclusively at the conclusion of the entire situation? I shall be very happy to have the observations of the Senator from Connecticut, who I know is intimately familiar with this phase of the problem.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, there is a great deal of reason and logic in what the Senator from Michigan has said. At the same time, I think the Members of the Senate should remember that we are offering to the Philippine people a new form of government with certain provisos in it. We are asking them to call a constitutional convention to adopt the constitution which we propose, which will undoubtedly be debated. If I were a member of that convention and the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan should prevail, I would certainly fight as hard as I could against the adoption of any such constitution containing such a provision which might give the President of the United States at any future time, before we had finally secured independence, the right to make reservations of hundreds of thousands of additional acres of land which at the present moment belong to the United States Government.

I think that before the act goes into effect it would be wise for the President to make all reservations which he thinks, looking as far ahead as one can, are or may be needed for the protection of our interests in the Philippines and the Far East. It is my information that such has already been done. But whether it has been done or not, it may be done before the act becomes a law, and it will not become a law until the act has been accepted by concurrent resolution of the Philippine Legislature.

I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan opens the door to abuse and would serve very justly to frighten the Filipino people. I hope it will not be adopted, either as to the "or may be hereafter" or as to the independent government. I think when the independent government is set up, if there should be anything needed in the Philippines for a military or naval station for the United States, that the Philippine government would be only too glad by treaty to make an arrangement whereby it could become the property of the United States.

Personally I should dislike very much to see any additional land acquired. I think at the present time, with the harbor of Cavite, with the great fortress at Corregidor and its adjacent fortresses, with the marine base and some of the military camps, we have sufficient to protect our interests in the Far East. That is one reason why I have been willing to support the bill. But I do not believe it would be fair to the Filipino people to ask them to vote for a constitution that left the door wide open for the President virtually to set aside a large part of the island of Mindanao, for instance, which at the present time belongs to the Government of the United States, as a reservation for the use of the United States.

Mr. HAWES. We now have approximately 800,000 acres which belong to the Government, which it seems to me would be ample for any purpose.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Connecticut a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Can he indicate to me where the title to Malacanan and the Government property occupied by the Governor General in Baguio resides? Where is that title?

Mr. HAWES. The title is in the Philippine government.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thought the title to Malacanan and the governor's palace at Baguio was in the Government of the United States, and that it was land reserved for the use of the Governor General and for the United States in the future. Is my understanding incorrect?

Mr. HAWES. It was purchased and the building completed by the Philippine government and paid for by it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Therefore it does not belong to the United States?

Mr. HAWES. That is my understanding.

Mr. BINGHAM. It was my understanding in the committee that it was the proposal of the Senator from Missouri and others who are interested in the matter that the high commissioner should reside at Malacanan.

Mr. HAWES. That is correct.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is still the case, is it not?

Mr. HAWES. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. The matter is merely that at the end of the period of United States occupation Malacanan should then go back to the Philippine government?

Mr. HAWES. That is all.

PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT ON ECONOMY LEGISLATION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the President has signed the economy bill. When he did so, he issued a statement expressing two grounds of regret in connection with the measure.

The President said:

First, it falls far short of the economies proposed by the Cabinet and other executive officers of the Government; many items of their proposals, which were in turn recommended by committees on economy of the two Houses, failed of passage—

And so forth.

In view of the recent history of this measure the President's statement is astonishing. It will be recalled that a press announcement quoted the President as having said additional economies to those carried in the bill were necessary in an approximate amount of from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000, although during the debate on the economy bill members of the Economy Committee complained that they were being hampered in their action by the activities of members of the Cabinet, some of whom were sending out messages inviting propaganda against provisions in the bill. It was also affirmed here that if the members of the President's Cabinet would just keep their hands off and let the committee work out the problem without interference and without the exercise of undue influence from the Cabinet, better results than were in prospect could be secured.

Two weeks ago and more, when the statement already referred to was attributed by the press to the President, the Senator from Pennsylvania, assuming to speak with the authority of the Chief Executive, said that the President had not declared the Budget out of balance, had not asserted that an additional amount of $150,000,000 or $200,000,000 must be provided, either by way of taxes or by economies. Whereupon I presented to the Senate a resolution, as follows:

Whereas the President, with the assistance of the members of his Cabinet and the heads of the independent offices and commissions, is in better position within the short time before Congress adjourns to ascertain in what departments, bureaus, commissions, and independent offices a further reduction of governmental costs can be brought about and how it may be done: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President is requested to confer with the members of his Cabinet and the heads of all bureaus, commissions, and independent offices, upon the best way to bring about said reduction in appropriations, and to submit to Congress for its consideration specific suggestions covering each item that the President recommends as a suitable way and place to accomplish such reduction in the appropriations for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1932.

The resolution was adopted in the form in which it has just been read. It may be recalled that one expression in the preamble was eliminated because of the declaration by the Senator from Pennsylvania that it attributed to the President a statement which the Senator from Pennsylvania declared the President had not made. Nevertheless, upon the assumption that the President was not entirely satisfied with the economies proposed, this resolution was adopted. The President was invited to take such advice as he saw fit from his Cabinet members, the heads of bureaus, boards, and commissions, and to send specific or definite recommen-datations to the Senate to enable this body to make additional and necessary economies.

The resolution was adopted without a dissenting vote. It was agreed to on the calendar day June 14, 1932, while the economy bill was yet under consideration. Ample opportunity has been afforded the Chief Executive to supply the information and to make the suggestions for which the resolution calls. The President has totally failed to give any recognition to that resolution; he has exercised his prerogative and right to decline to reply to it.

It is not impressive, Mr. President, in view of the record I have recited, when the President declares that the economy bill "falls far short of the economies proposed by the Cabinet and other executive officers of the Government."

This is peculiarly important, in view of the fact that, as has already been stated, the Cabinet members interfered with the Economy Committee in the performance of their duties by bringing pressure to induce the committee to eliminate items of economy.

Reduction of the cost of government is an important subject. I think we all feel a measure of disappointment that greater results have not so far been attained, but I want the country to know that the Executive has not only had full opportunity to make definite suggestions for further reductions in Federal expenditures but that he has been invited to do so by the Senate of the United States in a resolution unanimously adopted. He has made no definite suggestions and contents himself with the declaration that he is disappointed.

There is another statement in the press report which is attributed to the President to the effect that the bill contains some provisions which will impose "unnecessary hardships on Government employees in minor matters." I agree with that. There is particularly one such provision now in mind, and it ought to be corrected just as soon as is practicable. The Senator from Connecticut has offered a resolution intended to accomplish that purpose. The important point is that the President himself and his Cabinet members and other executive offices under his control are largely responsible for the results which admittedly are in a measure disappointing.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment, in order that I may make a brief statement on the subject to which the Senator from Arkansas has referred?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I am very glad to learn from the President's statement that he agrees with the Senator from Arkansas and myself that there are some features of the so-called economy bill which will cause hardships, and I hope that we may, in the near future, provide some means of alleviating that condition. There is on the table at the present time a joint resolution which would repeal a portion of the bill and would alleviate the unnecessary suffering which will be caused, in the name of economy but for some other reason, on married persons in the Government service.

May I say a word further, Mr. President, out of sympathy for the President of the United States, because there was one matter that he personally did bring before the Economy Committee which was appointed largely at the instance of the Senator from Arkansas, consisting of three Senators from each side of the aisle? At the first meeting which we had with the President at the White House he suggested, if given the power, there was one thing he could do and could do promptly, and that was to consolidate various bureaus in many different departments connected with public works. He suggested that there should be a director of public works as the head of an independent executive department and that various agencies of the Government dealing with matters which in many countries come under a ministry, known as the minister of public works or the secretary of public works, be consolidated. That was a definite proposal which he made.

It was approved, my recollection is, by the House. It was approved also by the Economy Committee and reported to the full Senate Committee on Appropriations. There was no measure which we reported from the subcommittee to the full committee which caused more immediate explosion on the part of various members. It illustrates, in a way, the fact that the President is at great disadvantage when he does submit a definite proposal for consolidation. I regret most heartily, and sympathize with the position taken by the Senator from Arkansas, that the President has not seen fit to recommend other consolidations, but here is one that he did recommend specifically.

What happened in the full Committee on Appropriations I think will cause even the Senator from Arkansas to smile. In the first place, two Senators stated that they were so much interested in the question of the improvement of rivers and harbors and in flood control that they could not for the moment think of taking jurisdiction of flood control on the Mississippi River and river and harbor improvements from under the very able control of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army; that the officer who occupied that position and those under him were, in their view, so intimately acquainted with the problems concerned with that part of the public works program that it would never do to put them under a separate executive department of public works.

Scarcely had they concluded their protests when two other Senators joined in a protest that the great reclamation projects, which were under a very able official in the Interior Department, could not possibly be taken from under his direction and placed under a new director of public works, who probably had never seen a reclamation project and would not know what to do with one if he did see it, and who would be certain to ruin it if he had the chance. Therefore they must insist that the reclamation projects be not included in this new executive department. Whereupon another Senator said that the forest trails and matters connected with surveying the public lands could not be taken from under the very able hands of the particular department where they now rested and be placed under any new director of public works. Another Senator's voice was raised to say that in so far as public buildings were concerned he was quite sure that the supervising architect of the Treasury was much the best person to have charge of the erection of public buildings.

So when the Senators got through their various protests all there was left of that considerable section of the bill was a director of public works at a salary of $10,000 a year, and I took upon myself the responsibility of moving that the item providing for him be stricken out of the bill because there would be $10,000 for a man with nothing to do.

What I have stated, Mr. President, indicates some of the objections raised to the proposal; and although, as I said, I regret extremely that the President has not seen fit to indicate other consolidations that could be made, there is an instance of a consolidation which he did suggest and as to which he wished authority to take immediate action, but which met with so much opposition upon the part of so many different Senators that it could not be put through the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The subject matter under discussion—namely, economies in Government expenditures—is not limited to any one feature or to any one proposal. It gives opportunity for very broad consideration. It extends to every sphere of Federal activity; and the mere fact that there was no agreement as to a single proposal or suggestion that was thought to make possible some economies is no justification whatever for not proceeding with the matter in the practical, business way contemplated by the suggestion in the resolution.

It also might be added that one large loss in savings resulted from the incorporation in the bill of the furlough plan in preference to the straight salary-reduction proposal which the committee had submitted. After coming to the Senate and delivering an impressive message urging support of the economy committees in their very conscientious action as comprehended in their report, the President sent his secretary to the Senate to exert influence against the passage of that feature of the report, resulting in a loss of many million dollars.

I wanted these facts to be made clear.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Connecticut what is the present status of his resolution regarding the married women?

Mr. BINGHAM. I introduced it day before yesterday, and it is lying upon the table, and may be taken from the table, of course, at any time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, it would not apply, now that the bill has been signed.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, Mr. President; I changed it. As originally introduced, it was a concurrent resolution directing the Clerk of the House to make changes in the bill. As soon as the bill had gone out of the possession of the Congress I introduced a joint resolution repealing that section of the bill relating to married persons.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That, of course, is the proper course. I had not been advised that the Senator had introduced his joint resolution, which, of course, is the effective and proper way in which to handle the matter.

Mr. BINGHAM. And that is upon the table. It did not seem necessary to refer it to a committee, because the matter had been so fully discussed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No.

Mr. BINGHAM. It may be taken from the table whenever the Senate is willing to do so; and, in accordance with the interview just given out by the President, it would undoubtedly meet with his approval.

Mr. COPELAND. Why does not the Senator put it on its passage at once?

Mr. BINGHAM. I should be very glad to ask unanimous consent that it might be immediately considered, but I doubt very much whether that consent would be granted. In order, however, to show my entire good faith in the matter, I ask that the pending legislation be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate joint resolution to which reference has been made may be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McNARY. I shall have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7233) to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form of government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there is pending now an amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] to section 5 of the pending bill. This section, and its amendments as well, offer only another reason why I can not be enthusiastic over the legislation which we have before us.

When we give the Filipinos their independence I hope we will give the Filipinos their independence. Of course, I am aware that in Cuba we retained certain land as a naval station; did we not, may I ask the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HAWES. A naval base; yes.

Mr. COPELAND. I presume the purpose involved here is a similar thing; and yet, after all, the very fact that while we are talking about alienating sovereignty and giving them independence we have so many strings tied to our proposed action shows that it certainly is not a generous deed that we contemplate. Under present conditions, with sovereignty intact and limited to the United States, of course, we can do what we like in the Philippines. There is no doubt about that. When, however, we dispose of them—using the word now in the sense used by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] a little while ago in reading from the Constitution—I hope we will do it so generously and fully and completely that we will give the sovereign people of the Philippines the same control over their country that we have over ours.

When I was interrupted and left the floor a couple of hours ago, I was attempting to answer the question raised by the Senator from Utah. I had called the attention of the Senator from Utah to the statement made by Mr. Justice Malcolm to the effect that it is probable that the provision of the Constitution giving to Congress the power to dispose of territory applies to land as one kind of property; that it is equivalent to the word "land."

In 14 Peters (39 U. S.) is a case where the court passed is the case of United States against John P. Gratiot and others; and, of course, it goes back a long time—to 1840. It seems that under the authority of the President of the United States a license for smelting lead ore was given to these men for the period of a year, and the syllabus, on page 526, says:

The words "dispose of" the public lands, used in the Constitution of the United States, can not, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, receive any other construction than that Congress has the power, in its discretion, to authorize the leasing of the lead mines on the public lands in the territories of the United States. There can be no apprehension of any encroachments upon State rights by the creation of a numerous tenantry within the borders of the States from the adoption of such measures.

At page 537 the court, in its opinion, said:

This act establishes a land office and makes provisions for the disposal of the lands of the United States referred to in the title of the act; and, among other things, the fifth section declares as follows: "That the several lead mines in the Indiana territory, together with as many sections contiguous to each as shall be deemed necessary by the President of the United States, shall be reserved for the future disposal of the United States. And any grant which may hereafter be made for a tract of land containing a lead mine which had been discovered previous to the purchase of such tract from the United States shall be considered fraudulent and null; and the President of the United States shall be, and is hereby, authorized to lease any lead mine which has been or may hereafter be discovered in the Indiana territory for a term not exceeding five years."

That is the end of the quotation. The opinion of the court continues:

That the mines now in question lie within the territory referred to in the act of Congress and are the property of the United States is not denied. And the Constitution of the United States (Art. IV, sec. 3) provides "That Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States."

Now, here is the answer from the court to the question raised by the Senator from Utah:

The term "territory," as here used, is merely descriptive of one kind of property, and is equivalent to the word "lands." And Congress has the same power over it as over any other property belonging to the United States. * * * If such are the powers of Congress over the lands belonging to the United States, the words "dispose of" can not receive the construction contended for at the bar; that they vest in Congress the power only to sell and not to lease such lands. The disposal must be left to the discretion of Congress.

Further, in One hundred and eighty-second United States Reports, at page 314, is a quotation I wish to make from Mr. Chief Justice White in the case of Downes against Bidwell. I am sure I need not discuss the nature of the case. It is one of the so-called insular cases, which had to do with the relationship of our country to various possessions formerly Spanish ceded to us by the treaty of peace, and they relate largely to customs matters.

This case of Downes against Bidwell was a very remarkable case. I doubt if there is another like it in the entire history of our courts. It will be recalled that it is one of the insular cases. This particular one involved the question whether merchandise brought into the port of New York from Puerto Rico was exempt from the same duty required to be levied upon like imports of merchandise imported from foreign countries.

All of the Justices took part in the case. The remarkable thing about it, however, is that no one opinion was rendered in which a majority of the court concurred. As I have said, I doubt if there is any other such case.

The court divided into five groups. Mr. Justice Brown announced the conclusion and judgment of the court. In this judgment of affirmance, Mr. Justice White, Mr. Justice Shiras, and Mr. Justice McKenna concurred. Mr. Justice Gray concurred in the judgment of affirmance, and in substance agreed with the opinion of Mr. Justice White, but in addition rendered an opinion of his own. There were two groups of dissenters. Mr. Chief Justice Fuller was among these. With him concurred Mr. Justice Brewer and Mr. Justice Peckham. Mr. Justice Harlan concurred in the dissenting opinion of the Chief Justice and gave additional reasons for his dissent.

Because of the divided court, the opinion of a single group in this case on the collateral questions could not be considered conclusive. As a matter of fact, however, only one of these groups discussed at any length the question involved in what is meant by the "territorial clause" or disposing clause of the Constitution. What Mr. Justice White stated, however, is so illuminating that we may well take the time to rehearse his words and study their meaning. I am sure the Senate will be interested to study anew the opinion of this great Chief Justice. It has an important bearing upon the matter at issue. His words and the authority of his name are so significant that we may well consider what he says. On page 314 of United States Supreme Court Reports, volume 182, I find this language:

All the confusion and dangers above indicated, however, it is argued, are more imaginary than real, since, although it be conceded that the treaty-making power has the right by cession to incorporate without the consent of Congress, that body may correct the evil by availing itself of the provisions of the Constitution giving to Congress the right to dispose of the territory and other property of the United States. This assumes that there has been absolute incorporation by the treaty-making power, on the one hand, and yet asserts that Congress may deal with the territory as if it had not been incorporated into the United States. In other words, the argument adopts conflicting theories of the Constitution and applies them both at the same time. I am not unmindful that there has been some contrariety of decision on the subject of the meaning of the clause empowering Congress to dispose of the territories and other property of the United States, some adjudged cases treating that article as referring to property as such and others deriving from it the general grant of power to govern territories. In view, however, of the relations of the territories to the Government of the United States at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and the solemn pledge then existing that they should forever "remain a part of the Confederacy of the United States of America," I can not resist the belief that the theory that the disposing clause relates as well to a relinquishment or cession of sovereignty as to a mere transfer of rights of property is altogether erroneous.

Observe again the inconsistency of this argument. It considers, on the one hand, that so vital is the question of incorporation that no alien territory may be acquired by a cession without absolutely endowing the territory with incorporation and the inhabitants with resulting citizenship, because, under our system of government, the assumption that a territory and its inhabitants may be held by any other title than one incorporating is impossible to be thought of. And yet to avoid the evil consequences which must follow from accepting this proposition, the argument is that all citizenship of the United States is precarious and fleeting, subject to be sold at any moment like any other property. That is to say, to protect a newly acquired people in their presumed rights it is essential to degrade the whole body of American citizenship.

The reasoning which has sometimes been indulged in by those who asserted that the Constitution was not at all operative in the territories is that, as they were acquired by purchase, the right to buy included the right to sell. This has been met by the proposition that if the country purchased and its inhabitants became incorporated into the United States, it came under the shelter of the Constitution, and no power existed to sell American citizens. In conformity to the principles which I have admitted it is impossible for me to say at one and the same time that territory is an integral part of the United States protected by the Constitution, and yet the safeguards, privileges, rights, and immunities which arise from this situation are so ephemeral in their character that by a mere act of sale they may be destroyed. And, applying this reasoning to the provisions of the treaty under consideration, to me it seems indubitable that if the treaty with Spain incorporated all the territory ceded into the United States, it resulted that the millions of people to whom that treaty related were, without the consent of the American people as expressed by Congress, and without any hope of relief, indissolubly made a part of our common country.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator be kind enough to yield for the purpose of allowing me to make a motion for a recess?

Mr. COPELAND. I could hardly resist such a request on the part of the Senator from Oregon. I will be glad to yield to him for that purpose, and will resume my discussion of this very interesting opinion of the Supreme Court when I can get the floor to-morrow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am wondering whether it is not practicable to enter into an agreement touching this bill. I desire to ask unanimous consent that after the Senator from New York shall conclude his address no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes on the bill or any amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am wondering about the propriety of making a proposal of that kind with so few present. It would be better to propose it in the morning, after we have a roll call.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. We do not require a roll call for this kind of an agreement.

Mr. COPELAND. I should have to object anyway, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator objects.

NOTIFICATION OF THE PRESIDENT OF CONFIRMATION OF GARDNER COWLES, SR.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the nomination of Mr. Cowles to be a member of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was delayed at my suggestion for several days. Only one executive session has since been held. I am disposed to ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, that the President be notified of the confirmation of that nomination, in view of all the circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND LABOR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I desire to state that I understand that it would probably be impossible to get a quorum at this time of the day. I have a conference report on the Commerce, Labor, Justice, and State Departments appropriation bill. There is one amendment in disagreement, the Senate conferees being unable to get an agreement from the House. They absolutely refuse to recede. So that I shall make a motion to recede from the Senate amendment to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, instead of making it to-night. I do not like to take that action, but I feel that the circumstances make it really imperative that we should recede from the amendment of the Senate, if the Senate will so vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, is the Senator prepared to state the nature or substance of the amendment that is in disagreement?

Mr. JONES. I have no hesitancy in doing that. A provision was put into the bill designating $200,000 as the amount to be set aside under the appropriation for air-navigation purposes, for the northern line between the Twin Cities and Puget Sound. The conferees agreed to $50,000, instead of $200,000. The House, however, rejected that by quite a decisive vote on yesterday, and the House conferees have taken that action practically as an instruction. Our conferees have to-day reluctantly decided to recede from our amendment. I want to say, however, that this recession will increase the appropriation as the bill passed the Senate by $200,000, and will restore the amount in the bill as it passed the House and came to the Senate.

SUSPENSION OF ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, on yesterday I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 188, which was passed by the Senate promptly and sent to the House, which has to-day passed it. It has gone to the White House and the President has just signed it. This removes all doubt as to the question of the validity of the original resolution passed on June 6, 1932. To show the necessity for this resolution I ask that there be placed in the Record a letter on the subject from the Secretary of the Interior and the solicitor of the department to the Speaker of the House of Representatives dated to-day, June 30, 1932. I congratulate Congressman ENGLEBRIGHT for the efficiency and speed he has shown in initiating and expediting this resolution:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Washington, June 30, 1932.

Memorandum for the Secretary.

Joint resolution, Public, No. 23, Seventy-second Congress, approved June 6, 1932, suspends the necessity of performing annual labor or improvements from July 1, 1931, to July 1, 1932. Some question has been raised in the Eastern States as to whether this legislation does not leave a hiatus from the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, to the end of the year for performing annual labor on mining claims, which is 12 o'clock meridian on July 1, 1932, and it is feared that during this brief period suspension will not be in force and claims might be relocated.

In my opinion the purpose of the act clearly indicated that Congress meant to relieve from the necessity of performing this work during the year ending at noon July 1, 1932. However, it should be remembered that this department can not prevent claim jumpers from physically relocating or attempting to relocate claims on the theory that the resolution does not cover the entire year. However, whatever might be the ultimate outcome of attempted relocation the department can not prevent the relocators from bringing suits in the courts, subjecting the present owners of mining claims to long and expensive litigation. To remove any possible doubt and to obviate the trouble and expense which would result from such relocations, I suggest that you advise the House of Representatives to enact Senate Joint Resolution 188 which was passed by the Senate yesterday. This resolution when enacted will remove all possibility of doubt of attempted relocation and ensuing litigation.

E. C. FINNEY, Solicitor.

Approved and recommended to the attention of Speaker GARNER of the House of Representatives.

RAY LYMAN WILBUR, Secretary.

JUNE 30, 1932.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, July 1, 1932, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 30, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Benjamin Wiltshire Meeks, superintendent Washington district of the Baltimore conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Father, in the midst of the day's work we pause for meditation and for worship. We pray that we may hear again the inner voice speaking in our own hearts and may give to that voice a conscious response. We remember that Thou art the source of all light and truth and love, and so we who have so often placed ourselves at the disposal of the world's fingers to play upon would in this hour come before Thee that Thy spirit might touch the strings of our hearts and awaken within us new insights into truth and new sympathies for our fellow men. We pray Thee for our world, O Father, with all of its feverish unrest, its passion for freedom, its eagerness for things, and its eager, though often unexpressed, longing for Thee. We remember that we are a people composite, made from all the nations of the earth, and yet under the guidance of Thy grace and Thy love we have learned to live and serve together; but now doubt and fear and perplexity have bewildered us. Thou knowest how hard it is for us when the night is upon us to believe that the morning shall yet break. Therefore we pray that Thou shalt give to our leaders wisdom and courage and sympathetic understanding and a realization that they are the ministering servants of the Most High God, so that all their deeds and words and acts may be begun, continued, and ended in Thee. We pray that upon them and upon us there may come the true spirit of discernment and understanding, so that we may see duty more clearly, that we may seek to live by truth and to establish our common life on the eternal foundations of righteousness and love. Send us out into the great but disturbed generations where no man need waste his life to find our tasks in the service of self-denial to Thee and of sympathetic understanding with our fellow men and to make our world a better place for Thee to raise Thy children in. To this end may the spirit of Him who came not to be ministered unto but to minister be upon us. We ask in His name and for His sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that each Member may have from now until the time of the printing of the last Record in which to extend his own remarks and in order that there may be no misunderstanding I mean that if I individually want to extend my own remarks on two different subjects I may do it in two different extensions.

The SPEAKER. That is the rule. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman modify his request so as to permit Members to have this right within seven calendar days after the adjournment of this session?

Mr. SNELL. I do not know when the last Record will be printed. It may be within five days or seven days after the adjournment of the session. I have no objection to such a limitation. I understand from the gentleman from South Carolina that the last Record will be printed within five or seven days after the adjournment of the session.

Mr. STAFFORD. It may be printed two months after the close of the Congress, and it is usually one month. I suggest that the gentleman make it seven calendar days.

Mr. SNELL. I will make it 10 days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that each Member of the House may have 10 days in which to extend his own remarks after the adjournment of this session. Is there objection?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not want to be arbitrary or unfair, but it does seem to me that when we are trying to economize this is one of the places where we can set an example. It is my notion that matters which are placed in the Record by way of extension of remarks or speeches made on the floor are intended to influence legislation. When the session is over there is no such excuse left, and any remarks placed in the Record after the close of the session are placed there purely for political purposes.

My observation two years ago, after the close of the short session, was that there were speeches put in the Record which men would not have had the temerity to make in the faces of their colleagues or even extend such remarks in the Record when they could be answered. I think it is a bad practice to allow these extensions after the House has adjourned when there is no excuse for it, but it is the tradition here—

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I agree to a certain extent with what the gentleman has said. Of course, it is up to the conscience of each individual Member as to what he will put in the Record, and that is something you can never control.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman accept an amendment making a charge of $1 an inch, which is the usual advertising rate?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. That is in line with what I say, because these extensions are purely political. I was surprised that the watchdog of the RECORD should make this request, particularly at a time when we are trying to economize. Every page in the RECORD costs the Government nearly $60.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman from Massachusetts has followed a definite policy which has met with the general approval of the House; and that policy, of course, has saved a great deal of space in the RECORD, and thereby saved a great deal of money. However, the gentleman from Massachusetts does not desire to curtail the rights or privileges of any Member of the House, although he is in hearty sympathy with what the gentleman has said.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to point out that in part what the gentleman says is absolutely correct, but there are many subjects in which the gentleman from Kansas is deeply interested and in which I am interested, like banking matters, the stock exchange, interest rates, reports, and facts, which neither the gentleman from Kansas nor myself could get across through the daily press, so that this is the only medium we can use and give the people of the country the information.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. We have been here seven months, and the most we have done is to talk. Has not everybody had his chance?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman from New York whether under his request Members may embody more than one subject in a speech, or must they carry the different subjects in separate extensions?

Mr. SNELL. Either way.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to call attention to the fact that this request was made yesterday and granted.

Mr. SNELL. It was not granted yesterday.

Mr. STEVENSON. I understood it was.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me that if we did the right thing there should not be any extensions of remarks after adjournment. There ought to be a rule that the day before the last day of the session should be the last day on which there could be extensions of remarks, and they should be printed so they could be seen by every Member of this House before this House adjourns. To my mind that is the way it ought to be done, from the little experience I have had here. If the Members want to throw this wide open and permit the extension of hundreds of speeches for purely political purposes and disregard the taxpayers of the country, all right. Let tradition have its way. I yield to the desire of my minority leader, Mr. SNELL, and to our Speaker.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

THE REVENUE LAW

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged resolution, House Resolution 276, from the Committee on Printing

The clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 276

Resolved, That 10,000 additional copies of the slip law (Pub. No. 154, 72d Cong.), an act to provide revenue, to equalize taxation, and for other purposes, be printed for the use of the House Document Room.

The resolution was agreed to.

AMELIA EARHART PUTNAM

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report on the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 165) authorizing the President of the United States to present the distinguished-flying cross to Amelia Earhart Putnam.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill (H. R. 9699) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

"The offices of surveyors of customs (except the surveyor of customs at the port of New York) and appraisers of merchandise (except the appraiser of merchandise at the port of New York), 21 in all, with annual salaries aggregating $102,000, are hereby abolished. The duties imposed by law and regulations upon surveyors and appraisers of customs, their assistants and deputies (except the surveyor and the appraiser, their assistants and deputies, at the port of New York) are hereby transferred to, imposed upon, and continued in positions now established in the Customs Service by or pursuant to law, as the Secretary of the Treasury by appropriate regulation shall specify; and he is further authorized to designate the titles by which such positions shall be officially known hereafter. The Secretary of the Treasury, in performing the duties imposed upon him by this paragraph, shall administer the same in such a manner that the transfer of duties provided hereby will not result in the establishment of any new positions in the Customs Service."

And the Senate agree to the same.

and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert "$19,460,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendment numbered 9.

The Senate has modified this section by requiring that in giving effect to it special consideration be given to the domestically manufactured article where the raw material of which the article is made is grown in the United States; and the House has accepted the Senate amendment.

AMENDMENT IN DISAGREEMENT

On No. 9: Making available $6,000 of the appropriation for the Customs Service for the construction of gates at the international boundary across the highway at the port of San Ysidro, Calif.

JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
WILLIAM W. ARNOLD,
LOUIS LUDLOW,
WILL R. WOOD,
M. H. THATCHER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the conferees met last night and agreed upon this report. It is a complete report signed by the 10 conferees representing the Senate and the House. I have not had an opportunity to prepare a formal statement with reference to the appropriations carried.

I may say that as agreed upon, the bill carries $250,308,158 for the operations of the Treasury Department, and $805,939,675 for the Post Office Department, or a total of $1,056,247,833.

This is $48,000,000 less than was appropriated for the present fiscal year. I am speaking now in round figures. It is $27,000,000 less than the estimates. It is $3,000,000 less than the amount carried in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice one item where the committee, if I am not erroneous in my assumption, has departed from a policy that Congress has heretofore adopted in paying for pneumatic-tube service in New York City. The Senate amendment provided that the rate of pay per mile should be $19,500. The rate as carried in the House bill is $18,500. Ever since this service was adopted, the maximum rate has been $19,000 per mile.

Mr. BYRNS. Nineteen thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Tennessee states that the maximum rate has been $19,500. I am only relying on my memory, and I have not studied this matter for many, many years, not since I was a member of the Post Office Committee nearly 20 years ago; but my impression is that the maximum rate, as provided in the original law, is $19,000 per mile.

Mr. BYRNS. No; if the gentleman will permit, the original law provided for $18,500, but there was a proviso giving the contractor and the Government the right to appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to October 22, I think, following the passage of that law for a revision of the rate. It provided that in no event should the contract carry more than $19,500 per mile. Thereupon the contractor took the matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission allowed the full amount provided of $19,500, and this has been the amount of the contract for the past 10 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I am quite certain of my position as to this. When the law was originally passed providing for pneumatic-tube service in the five large metropolitan cities, namely, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and Chicago, the rate was fixed without right of review by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BYRNS. That may be true.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not say what law may have been passed in the last decade, and particularly during that period of time when I was out of Congress. So if the gentleman says that under existing law the Interstate Commerce Commission has the right to review the rate and place the limit up to $19,500 and the conference committee has adopted that rate, of course there is no basis for my position and no reason for my rising and criticizing the matter.

Mr. BYRNS. I did not intend to be so understood. I may say that 10 years ago when this contract was made the law provided that it should be at the rate of $18,500 a mile, but gave both contracting parties the right to appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission for a revision, with a limitation that the maximum should not be higher than $19,500. This applied only to the 10-year contract. So they have been drawing $19,500 for the past 10 years under that contract, which expires to-day.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the basis for the House committee recommending not in excess of $18,500?

Mr. BYRNS. What actuated the House committee, and the House, I take it, in passing the bill carrying $18,500, was the fact that the law originally provided for that. It was a matter of lengthy discussion in conference, and we thought we could fix it at $18,500, because the cost of everything has gone down, and if $19,500 was a sufficient sum in the past, $18,500 would be reasonable for the future.

Mr. STAFFORD. And there has been no addition to the original equipment—the machinery is static, and the investment has been there for 20 years.

Mr. BYRNS. The reply to that was that there has been a new station established in New York and some additional improvement which justified the $19,500.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield? I do not know anything about the reasonableness of the amount or the politics back of the tube ownership, but I do want to say that the tubes are absolutely indispensable in the city of New York.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no denying that fact. I made an investigation of that, and it is the one city where it can be defended.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I see in amendment No. 44 it appropriates $19,460,000, instead of the $19,000,000 as proposed by the House. Is that the subject that we had up in the House the other day?

Mr. BYRNS. No. The Senate put on two amendments. The gentleman knows that the House bill carried $19,000,- 000, and the Senate put on an amendment carrying $375,000 for the purpose of establishing night flying between Salt Lake and San Diego, and $85,000 for the route extending from Charlotte down through Georgia to some other cities. That made a total of $460,000.

Mr. SNELL. And you have agreed to both?

Mr. BYRNS. No. The final result of another extended discussion was the allowance of the appropriation of $460,000, and leaving the matter wholly, as all other appropriations are, with the Postmaster General.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. COLTON. I would not like to have that statement that night air mail between Salt Lake City, Utah, and San Diego, Calif., is not needed, go unchallenged. Much mail is going another way which ought to go this route, and will go if this service is restored. It is a question of going around the "U" instead of across the top of it. This is the logical mail route for Chicago, Omaha, Denver, and all that section for mail going west.

There is a decided need for this service. Personally, I have no information at all as to how this additional money is to be used, but I feel that on this great transcontinental line there is absolute need for the night service.

Mr. BYRNS. We have decided to leave that entirely with the Postmaster General.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. In addition to what the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON] says, I am quite surprised to hear the chairman of the committee say that there is no need for this night flying between San Diego and Salt Lake City. Two months ago, or three months ago, when the matter was under consideration before, I directed attention to what it meant, not only so far as Salt Lake City is concerned, but for all the air mail between Salt Lake City and Chicago. This is what has happened. When they took off the night flying on the first of January, of course the air mail continued for a few days, and then it was found that without night flying there was absolutely no saving in time in the air mail between the western coast and all places from Salt Lake City on, east of Omaha. As far as Denver is concerned, which is a metropolis, the incoming mail was from 1,000 to 1,500 pounds a day; it dropped to about 30 or 40 pounds a day. There has been promise after promise that the matter would be considered. There is a fight between some of the air lines that seem to be given consideration by the Post Office Department. The air mail depends upon the development of speed, and it is absolutely impossible without the night flying, starting from the western coast, to save time in coming easterly. I can go by train from Washington to Denver as fast as I can go by the current air lines. I can come East by the transportation lines in the air faster, but going West, because of the waits and the non-night flying, I can go just as fast by train. A similar situation has been created by stopping the night flying of mail East from the Pacific coast by way of Salt Lake City. If you are going to make air mail of any avail whatsoever, between or starting at the Pacific coast, and the whole Rocky Mountain region down to the Missouri River, you have to start your mail by night flying, starting on the western coast, Los Angeles, San Diego, and San Francisco, and in the nighttime, coming east, to gain the time which will result in a saving over mail by rail. The gentlemen in the Post Office Department know that. What they are doing now is trying an experiment and they say to you that there is not now enough air mail. There is not. Anyone who sends mail by air, any business man, pays for it in order to get speed, and all that is left now from the air mail are the little letters that people are sending home with a 5-cent stamp on.

Mr. BYRNS. Of course the gentleman understands that my statement is based on information I have received. I know nothing about the matter myself.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. There are two points that I would like to obtain information upon. Why did the House managers have to accept the Senate reduction to $22,000,000 in the appropriation for the Customs Service, a service which is a revenue-producing one? Is it contemplated to abolish or consolidate some of the old-established customs districts if this conference report is agreed to?

Mr. BYRNS. Not so far as I know. The reason which actuated the conferees in accepting that amendment was the fact that it was specifically recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. He notified the Senate by letter that this, among certain other reductions, could be made in his department; and, of course, as he is the head of the department and said he did not need more money, we accepted the amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER. Why did the House managers not concur in the Senate amendment making the appropriation for the Coast Guard $18,240,000 instead of $20,640,000, in these days of economy, when the Coast Guard is not a revenue-producing agency of the Government?

Mr. BYRNS. That is under the head of pay and allowances. It was the contention of the Secretary of the Treasury, and I think abundantly justified, that if you eliminated $2,000,000 from this appropriation it would destroy the whole service.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman well knows that since we made the Coast Guard a prohibition-enforcement agency the total appropriation for the Coast Guard has increased over 300 per cent. Three times as much is appropriated for the Coast Guard since it was made a prohibition-enforcement agency; and in these days, when the people are indicating their opposition to the prohibition law, and in these days of economy, why can we not cut out this useless prohibition branch of the Coast Guard service if the gentleman is really for economy?

Mr. BYRNS. I understand, so far as the prohibition enforcement is concerned, that that takes 40 per cent or 50 per cent of the total appropriations for the Coast Guard, but the Coast Guard is a great service, and we must not look at it solely from the standpoint of the enforcement of prohibition. It saves human lives and is engaged in many other activities with which the gentleman is familiar. We do not want to destroy that service, and this was for pay and allowances. If they do not need it for that purpose, it will not be so expended.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman has been on the Committee on Appropriations for a long time, and he knows that prior to 1924 we had a small annual appropriation for the Coast Guard, and that since you made a prohibition-enforcement unit out of it you have trebled the annual appropriation. Now, in these days of economy, why can we not reduce some of that Coast Guard prohibition-enforcement personnel and save some money for the taxpayers?

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. In order to ask the gentleman relative to State health cooperation, whether in the gentleman's opinion the existing service now being rendered by the Federal Government for rural sanitation and health work will be curtailed by this, or will they be able to carry on this service?

Mr. BYRNS. I take it that the appropriation which is carried in this report for next year will undoubtedly have the effect of curtailing that work, because the gentleman will understand they have been working under what might be called a very large emergency appropriation. This goes back to $300,000.

Mr. GREEN. Of course, the emergency drought relief work is about over. I was wondering if the rural health sanitation work would probably be able to go along as it had before. Did that come out of the committee's proceedings?

Mr. BYRNS. I just stated I did not think it would be carried on to the same extent as it has been, because they have been using an emergency appropriation. This report does not provide for an emergency appropriation.

It provides for $300,000, the amount that was in the bill when it passed the House. Heretofore they have had an emergency appropriation to care for conditions growing out of the floods on the Mississippi River and the drought which swept certain sections of this country. Those causes brought about this emergency appropriation. Of course, I know it is said this is an emergency appropriation that was proposed in the Senate on account of economic conditions, but, of course, the economic situation can not be taken into consideration in a regular annual appropriation bill. I have been one of the most ardent supporters of rural sanitation in Congress. Those in the Public Health Service know that, but when we are proposing a relief bill, as we propose to pass, that ought to be earmarked and placed in that bill and not made a part of the regular annual appropriation. We have done it with nothing else, and, as much as I am in favor of rural sanitation, I am not in favor of making that distinction.

Mr. GREEN. The $300,000 that is embraced in the bill would enable the work to go on normally as it did before the emergency appropriation?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Were those emergency appropriations carried in a regular appropriation bill or in a deficiency bill?

Mr. BYRNS. In the deficiency bill.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. But the Senate did put in an item of $3,000,000 for this item of rural sanitation and, as I understand, the conferees took that out.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; for the reasons I have just explained.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. And, of course, there will be no opportunity for this House to vote for the reinstatement of that item in the bill?

Mr. BYRNS. Not unless the House desires to vote down this report and make it impossible to pass it in time for the next fiscal year. I hope the House will not do that.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I know that the gentleman has been one of the staunchest and best friends of rural sanitation, as far as cooperation on the part of the Federal Government is concerned. I am only sorry, however, that the gentleman did not give the House an opportunity to vote on that item.

Mr. BYRNS. I should like very much to have done that, but of course the gentleman understands that I am in a position where I am expected, and properly so, to do what I can to conserve public money; and, regardless of my personal view on any particular activity, I will not stand here, whether it is in my own State or some other State, and advocate a thing purely because of my own personal views.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Although I strongly agree with the gentleman, I realize it takes intestinal fortitude for the gentleman to take the position which he does.

Mr. BYRNS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. GLOVER. As I remember, the appropriation was $2,000,000 for 21 States last year. This $3,000,000 applies to the entire United States for health work, does it not?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. GLOVER. Now, with the condition we have prevailing in this country, with the small appropriation that is left for rural health work, when there are 28,000 men now in Washington in a camp, and when so many men throughout the United States are being cared for by the Red Cross and other activities, to preserve life, and where disease is likely to break out, does the gentleman really believe it is safe to cut this appropriation to that extent and leave the entire United States at the mercy of the ravages of disease? We have taken care of animals; we have taken care of hog cholera; we take care of every disease that destroys other property, but when it comes to the health of our people are we to surrender on the question of economy? Is it economy to risk the health of our people on account of the little sum that might be saved?

Mr. BYRNS. Now, may I say to the gentleman that the appropriation that is recommended in this report is not a cut of the appropriation made for rural sanitation. It is the same amount that has been allowed. It is true that in 1931—and the gentleman will remember it was for the fiscal year 1931—$2,000,000 was appropriated as an emergency appropriation on account of the drouth situation which prevailed in the gentleman's State and many other States. That money was not all expended in 1931. Part of it came over to the present fiscal year. I am not able to give the exact figures, but it was expended in 1931 and a part of it expended in this year. Now, there is no drouth. There has been no situation brought to the attention of the House, showing that an emergency appropriation was needed for drought relief or flood relief which would have justified an additional appropriation of $3,000,000 for the year 1933.

The records show that public health throughout the United States to-day is better than it has ever been, and it is the boast of the Public Health Service that this is true. We are very happy that it is so. So your committee felt, when we are doing all we can to hold down appropriations to the lowest possible minimum, that there could be no justification for providing for an emergency appropriation in this, the regular annual appropriation bill, of $3,000,000 for this particular service, as much as I would personally like to see it done.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In this discussion, as occurs so often, it seems to me, some of the Members are proceeding upon a mistaken theory that it is the duty of the Federal Government to provide for all of these local necessities. Why should the Federal Government make appropriations for rural sanitation in the States at all? In my opinion, only in cases of extreme emergency, where it appears the States are not able for some extraordinary reason to do their own work and take care of their own people and their own necessities, should such work be done by the Federal Government.

Once we start an appropriation of this kind in an emergency, as we did in 1931, the next time an item of this kind comes up in an appropriation bill, Members of the House from the sections of the country which were benefited by the emergency legislation will try to continue the emergency appropriation, to increase it and to enlarge the functions and the purposes for which the appropriation was originally made. Unless the Members of the House and of the other body sometime begin to realize that the Federal Government can not do everything the States ought to do, we will never reduce the expenses of the Federal Government. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. The Federal Government is spending a lot of money trying to keep people dry. It might better spend that same money trying to keep them well, for in this they would get more results.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Can the gentleman tell us how much money there is in State funds that have been appropriated, contingent upon a matching with Federal funds, that can not be expended because there will be no Federal funds available?

Mr. BYRNS. I am sorry I have no information on that.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. It is a considerable amount of money, is it not?

Mr. BYRNS. I really do not know. I may say to the gentleman it has never been brought to my attention.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield on another subject?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. My attention has been directed to amendment No. 10, which is shown by the conference report to have resulted in there being replaced in the bill the sentences concerning the comptrollers of customs, surveyors of customs, and appraisers of merchandise at customhouses. As the bill went from the House those offices were abolished, except at the port of New York.

In Colorado we have a customhouse. The official in charge is also the custodian of a lot of property, but I do not remember that we have an official called a "surveyor of customs." The official in charge is called the "collector of customs." He has a whole force in connection with the customs office, and another force for the work in his custodial capacity.

Can the gentleman tell me what change is going to be made in the customs office; first, as far as customs is concerned; and second, as far as custody and care of Government property is concerned? There is between four and five million dollars' worth of property out there, the United States mint, the customhouse, one or more old buildings, all of which are under the collector of customs as the general custodial officer.

Mr. BYRNS. Only that if this provision of the bill is adopted it will serve to abolish all the surveyors of customs except one in New York City. It will also serve to abolish all of the appraisers except one, who is in New York City. It retains seven comptrollers, who are presidential appointees.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Can the gentleman clear this up? Do these surveyors, comptrollers, and the other officers the gentleman named operate under the collector of customs, or is the collector of customs a subordinate officer to any of those having the titles the gentleman is speaking of?

Mr. BYRNS. No. They are all presidential appointments, and, therefore, they all claim to be, and doubtless are, of equal rank. There is always in these offices some question, as the gentleman knows, as to the jurisdiction of this and the jurisdiction of that.

Now, the collectors of customs do all this work with civil-service employees, and the information of the committee is that the surveyors are entirely useless except in the city of New York where the surveyor has about 1,300 men under him, so the Secretary of the Treasury states, and where he is badly needed. But, in all other sections the surveyor of customs is not needed. Some of these offices have been carried along for 150 years.

The Secretary of the Treasury thought the comptrollers were necessary because they really do the auditing in their various districts. Therefore they have been retained, although the House cut them out as the bill passed the House.

So the bill does not disturb the present situation in the least except to eliminate these officials who are unnecessary and admitted to be so by the department itself.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What about the appraisal of property in the ports outside of New York City?

Mr. BYRNS. That will be done as heretofore by the collectors of customs. They have civil-service employees under them whose duty it is to make appraisals of property.

The appraiser is merely sort of a figurehead.

Now, to illustrate this, let me say we have 300 ports in this country now and only 14 appraisers. If we need an appraiser in a port we ought to have 300 instead of 14.

At San Francisco and New Orleans vacancies occurred a few years ago and there were some differences about the appointments.

The gentleman may be familiar with one of them. Some differences arose about the appointments and those places were held vacant for two or three years, and my information is they would be vacant to-day if certain distinguished gentlemen who are not members of this body had not gotten busy and insisted upon some appointments being made.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. I think the gentleman in responding to inquiries made by the gentleman from Colorado unintentionally used the phrase "surveyors of customs" when he meant to refer to appraisers, at least, the gentleman used that phrase and made the statement that the final result of this appropriation bill, as far as it affects these officers, surveyors, and appraisers, was this, that we are right back where we started, with the exception of the fact that the surveyor and appraiser of customs had been exempted in New York. The gentleman did not mean that, did he?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. This statement of the managers says that the only exception now made from the original provision as the House sent the bill to the Senate is that it excepts the appraiser at the port of New York.

Mr. BYRNS. And the surveyor.

Mr. BEEDY. But the statement does not say that.

Mr. BYRNS. That is what the report does.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. That is shown on page 1 of the report.

Mr. BEEDY. I am referring to page 1 of the statement.

Mr. BYRNS. The appraiser was excepted in the bill as it passed the House. What the conferees have done has been to add the surveyor.

Mr. BEEDY. The report on the first page differs from the statement of the managers on the third page. What I can not understand is this: If these officers are all useless, why do we expect them in the port of New York?

Mr. BYRNS. I will give the gentleman the statement and justification made by the Secretary of the Treasury. The gentleman knows that the greater portion of our imports come in through New York. The Secretary of the Treasury says that the surveyor alone has 1,700 men under him out upon the piers when these ships come in, and they are coming in, as the gentleman knows, constantly. He says that the surveyor is needed in the city of New York on that account but no such condition prevails in any other port in the country. The same is true as to the appraiser.

Mr. BEEDY. In other words, it is contended that the appraisers and surveyors in all these other ports of the United States have no men under them and are mere fixtures.

Mr. BYRNS. Well, if they have any under them, they are really under the collector of customs, and he can look after them.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. When the bill left the House it left out appraisers and surveyors. I understand the Senator from Maryland, Senator GOLDSBOROUGH, introduced an amendment which was inserted on the Senate side. That has come before the conference, and what has the conference done with that proposition?

Mr. BYRNS. The conference, as I have just said, has agreed to eliminate all the surveyors of customs except the one who is stationed in New York. The Senate has agreed with the House in eliminating all the appraisers except one, who is also located in New York, and the House conferees agreed to the restoration of the seven comptrollers.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The appraisers and surveyors are now out of the bill as it was when it left the House? Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNS. As the bill left the House it had one appraiser in New York City. It carries no more as reported here. It had no surveyors. Now it carries one surveyor at New York City. It had no comptrollers, but the conferees have restored seven comptrollers.

Mr. THATCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. THATCHER. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the action which has been taken is in exact accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman is correct. I think we have acted in all these matters in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. The gentleman stated to the gentleman from Maryland that the conferees have now excepted a surveyor and what other officer?

Mr. BYRNS. And an appraiser.

Mr. BEEDY. In addition to the original provisions of the bill as it left the House?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. Is the evidence as to the necessity of these officers any different to-day than it was when we had the original hearings?

Mr. BYRNS. I said to the gentleman that the House excepted the appraiser in the city of New York, but it did abolish the office of surveyor. That office has been restored by the conferees.

Mr. BEEDY. I really do not understand the situation. I wish the gentleman would explain it further.

Mr. BYRNS. Let me state this to the gentleman, and I think this tells the story: The amount of customs receipts which come in through the New York City port is $204,937,612.66. The nearest in amount which was collected at any other port was at Philadelphia, and the amount of receipts at the Philadelphia port was $29,286,573.15, and next to that comes the city of Boston with something over $23,000,000.

Now, here is one port bringing in $204,937,000, the great percentage of our customs receipts, which I think tells the story as to why some exception should be made with reference to these two positions.

Mr. BEEDY. If the gentleman will permit. Here is the point I am in doubt about. This inspector at New York has 1,700 men under him, but irrespective of how many men he has under him, if he is a useless officer, as is held to be the case at every other port, why keep him there? The collector of customs could take care of these 1,700 men, and the point, as I see it, and I may be entirely wrong, is that these surveyors and these inspectors have a specific duty to perform that the collector of customs can not perform and ought not be expected to perform, and regardless of the volume of imports coming into any one port, I understand there is a good deal of evidence to justify the contention that these men ought not to be dispensed with in the interest of so-called economy.

Mr. BYRNS. I may say to the gentleman—

Mr. BEEDY. What does this inspector in New York do that we could not get along without, since we are going to let all the rest of them go?

Mr. BYRNS. The surveyor in New York has 1,700 men under him, and I take it, if he is the kind of man he ought to be and that the President evidently thought he was when he was appointed, he is a pretty busy man.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes; he is a good man. I happen to know that he is a good man and a busy man.

Mr. BEEDY. They are all good men. The inspector and appraiser in my port of Portland, Me., are good men and have worked hard through the years.

Mr. BYRNS. Since the gentleman has mentioned his port, let me call attention to the situation in Portland.

Mr. BEEDY. Yes; I wanted the gentleman to do that.

Mr. BYRNS. The customs receipts or duties collected at the Portland (Me.) office or port amount to only $158,055.18. Portland has had up to this time an appraiser at a salary of $3,800 and a surveyor at a salary of $3,200, in addition to the regular collector of customs, and there is only collected there $158,000 a year. The gentleman, I am sure, will agree that there is no sense in continuing these offices, and this is only a sample of the other offices throughout the country.

Mr. BEEDY. Of course, if there is not any sense in continuing them, I do not want them continued; but the thing that staggers me is that throughout all these years we have never discovered that these men were unnecessary until now. I think it is a sad commentary on the efficiency of government, if that is the fact.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman must give the House and the Congress and the Secretary some credit for having found it out even at this late date.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman stated there are seven comptrollers retained. Are any of them at the Baltimore port?

Mr. BYRNS. I think one of them is in the gentleman's city.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Well, that will be some little advantage, anyhow. Is the gentleman positive about that?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; I am.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I only have one question with reference to amendment No. 44, concerning which there has been some discussion, and which relates to special provisions for air mail service. In the routes between Salt Lake City and San Diego, Calif., and between Charlotte, N. C., down to Augusta, Ga., the action proposed by the conferees is that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment inserting in lieu of the matter contained in the amendment simply the sum $19,460,000. I presume this is on the theory that the other language would be legislation?

Mr. BYRNS. No.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We had a similar situation yesterday, I may say, in the conference report on the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor bill, where there was a special provision for a route in the northwest between the Twin Cities and the Northwest.

Mr. BYRNS. No; it was not on the theory it was legislation. Personally, I was opposed to the increase, I will say to the gentleman, and I think I can say the same thing for some of my fellow conferees, although they can speak for themselves, of course. The gentleman knows how these things come up in conference and how we must sometimes accept some items which we really do not favor but on which a compromise is entirely justified. I am sure the gentleman has done this many times. This was not done because it was legislation but because it has been the uniform practice to make these appropriations in lump sums and leave to the discretion of the Postmaster General the question as to where the money can best be used. The reason I opposed the appropriation on yesterday was because neither the Postmaster General nor the Department of Commerce had requested, nor had the Budget approved, the appropriation that was asked.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But inasmuch as the legislation as now existing provides for a lump-sum appropriation, it would seem to me that a provision in an appropriation bill specifically designating certain air routes might be considered legislation.

Mr. BYRNS. It would be legislation; and if it were continued, it would finally resolve itself into pork-barrel legislation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And then it would have to come back to the House for separate action; but now, since the conference report agrees to the increase of the amount from $19,000,000 to $19,460,000, which difference is the exact amount that is required for these two routes, will not this increased amount be used for these two routes?

Mr. BYRNS. I do not think that would have the slightest influence on the Postmaster General because the conferees had nothing in their minds with reference to where it should be applied; that is up to him.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I would like to know the total appropriated for the Post Office Department and how much less than the Budget estimate.

Mr. BYRNS. The total amount as reported was $805,939,675.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is the amount carried in the conference report?

Mr. BYRNS. No. The amount carried in the conference report is $805,000,000. That makes a difference of $8,000,000.

Mr. RAMSEYER. You have increased it a little.

Mr. BYRNS. We have not increased it over the Budget estimate. The Budget estimate was $814,000,000, and the total carried in this bill is $805,000,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LA GUARDIA].

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the House to a matter of very great importance. I can do no more when I find any wrongful expenditure of public funds to obtain and collate the facts, get them in form, and present them to the House. When I present the facts to the House I have fulfilled my duty. If the House sanctions any wrongful act the responsibility is yours and not mine.

With reference to this Seatrain contract, I have not only got my facts and figures absolutely correct, but I have them from the official records. I first presented them to the Committee on Appropriations, and then I presented the facts to the House, and as a result of that the House approved of an amendment prohibiting the expenditure of any money or any appropriation for ocean mail contracts awarded to the Seatrain Co.

Yesterday, in the independent offices appropriation bill, the House approved of a similar limitation, prohibiting the use of any funds authorized for a loan to any corporation under the provisions of the merchant marine act, which loan is based upon any postal contract which is not approved by the Comptroller General. Surely there can be no objection to that. No objection, of course, from honest contractors.

I want to say that the members of the House committee were, I believe, sympathetic to my amendment to prevent the wrongful payment of public funds under this shady and irregular contract.

Gentlemen, this matter is not in my State, it does not involve anyone in my State, and I do not know a single person connected with it. I believe when a Member obtains information in the course of his official legislative duties regarding improper use of public funds it is his duty to bring it before the House. That is what I have been doing for the last 14 years. That is what I have done in this instance concerning the Seatrain Co. postal contract.

Now, I want to say that this contract is not regular. When I say it is irregular, I am very mild and moderate in my description of it. The contract will not receive the approval of the Comptroller General, and I am confident that payment by the Postal Department to the contractor of any money will only result in litigation and waste of public funds.

When the matter was before the House I gave the information I had. I told the membership of the trick and deception in the specifications which permitted only this Canadian company operating one ship built in England with an English mortgage and operated under the English flag, to bid. I informed the House, as I informed the committee, of the questionable validity of this curious and unique contract. I informed the House of the attitude of the Comptroller General and of his correspondence with the Postmaster General. The House, as I have stated, approved an amendment prohibiting the payment of funds under this contract. Since that time the beneficiaries under the contract have resorted to all sorts of underhanded methods to becloud the issue. I do not know who the individuals are forming the Canadian company and now for the sake of a subsidy reincorporating into an American company and boasting of their American citizenship. Personally I can not have much confidence in a group of men who will go to England to build a ship and then operate it under the British flag in order to pay less wages, have a smaller crew, feed their crew less, and thereby compete with decent, reputable ship operators owning and operating American ships under the American flag with an American crew, paying the American standard of wages.

There has been a great deal of misstatement made by the beneficiaries of this questionable contract. They went so far as to circularize the Members of the Senate, in stating that the House had approved of the amendment on a misstatement of facts. That statement is vicious and malicious and deliberately made in order to derive profit and gain from a questionable and sly transaction. Anyone who makes a false statement in order to obtain money or a thing of value is guilty of larceny under the penal law of the United States and of every State in the Union.

The Seatrain corporation and their low-grade local shyster lobbyist, who can be only a filthy denizen of the back alleys, have repeatedly stated that their contract has never been questioned by the comptroller. When they stated that, they knew they were telling a deliberate lie, but willfully did so in the hope that they could prevent interference by legislative prohibition with their shady contracts and thereby derive the benefits of the contract they wrongfully obtained. Now, I have here a carbon copy of the letter from the Comptroller General to the Postmaster General on which I based my charges. The letter speaks for itself.

Here is the letter from the comptroller. I read from the comptroller's letter of November 10, 1931, not to me but to the Postmaster General. I will put the entire letter in the RECORD. Now, gentlemen, the existence of this letter was denied by the beneficiaries of the contract, and the flat statement was made in writing by this company that the contract has not been questioned by the comptroller.

Whatever may be the administrative responsibility under the statutes in question—

Says the comptroller—

It is the duty and responsibility of this office to see that appropriated moneys are expended in accordance with the law and the terms of the appropriations. You will, of course, realize that the letter of October 31, 1931, does not constitute a reply to my letter of October 24, 1931, and this office must inform you that no charges against appropriated funds will be approved for payment to the Overseas Railways (Inc.) under the contract you report as having been awarded until there have been presented the facts requested in my letter of October 24, 1931, and such facts are shown to bring the contract within the terms of the statutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. The comptroller continues:

Further, it must be satisfactorily explained why a contract was entered into with the Overseas Railways (Inc.), as you have reported in your letter of October 31, 1931, when the only bid received, as reported in your letter of October 19, 1931, was from Seatrain Lines (Inc.), and the facts must be submitted showing the nationality of these corporations and the nationality or registration of the ships which are to be put into operation under the contract.

Mr. Speaker, bear in mind this is an official letter signed by the Comptroller General to the Postmaster General. Why was the bid made by one company, and awarded to another? I will tell you why. It was because the bid was made by a Canadian corporation owning a British-built ship and operating the ship under the British flag, and later they had to reorganize and form an American corporation before they could get the contract under the law. The ship at the time was flying the British flag, and I have photographs in my files showing that recently, within the last few months, after this contract had been awarded, the ship was changed from British registry to American registry, and yet it is intended to pay under this contract $2,379,374 in loans to build two more ships for this company in addition to several thousand dollars annual subsidy. If these operators were really interested and honestly concerned in American shipping, why did they incorporate in Canada, build the ship in England, and operate under the British flag? I appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that we should not recede in our provision, that we should insist upon putting in a limitation. This contract is not regular. We should not stand idly by and see public funds dissipated in this way. I have given you the facts, and I can not do any more.

Here is the complete letter from the Comptroller General:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, November 10, 1931.

The honorable the POSTMASTER GENERAL,

SIR: By letter dated October 24, 1931, this office invited your attention to section 405 (a) of the merchant marine act prescribing the qualifications as to nationality, etc., of vessels for the carrying of the United States mails under said act and to sections 406 and 407 of the merchant marine act with respect to the advertisement and awarding of contracts to the lowest bidder for the carrying of the mails. You were requested to inform this office, in effect, as to the nationality or registration of the Seatrain within the requirements of section 405 (a) of the aforesaid merchant marine act and to report why there should not be delayed until after the Interstate Commerce Commission had passed on the petition of the Florida East Coast Car Ferry Co. to operate ships between New Orleans and Habana the advertisement and letting of contracts for contract mail service between the two ports.

You have replied in letter of October 31, 1931, in pertinent part, as follows:

"It is believed that under the specifications the question of the Seatrain's eligibility is not at this stage material. The advertisement fixes the capacity and speed of the vessels to be operated and requires the construction of two new ships within two years from the beginning of the contract term, and provides that service on the route shall begin at a date optional with the contractor not later than one year from the date of the award of the contract. Under these conditions the ineligibility of the Seatrain would in no sense disqualify its owners from receiving the contract, but would simply put them under the necessity of having at least one of the new vessels ready for operation at the beginning of the contract term, or within one year from the date of the award. It is considered, therefore, that the questions which you have asked in the present connection may properly be left for subsequent determination.

"The second point raised by your letter has to do with the need for the early inauguration of the proposed service. You ask why the letting of a contract for this service should not be postponed until the Interstate Commerce Commission has disposed of the request of the Florida East Coast Co. for authority to inaugurate service between New Orleans and Habana. And you conclude with what I understand to be a suggestion that, upon a settlement of this matter favorable to the Florida Co., the department should redraft its specifications in such a way as to permit that company to bid.

"Upon further consideration of this part of your inquiry I am sure that you will agree with me that questions relating to the need for the service, the character of the service, and the specifications for the service are for determination by those agencies of the Government which by law or Executive order are charged with responsibility for the administration of the various phases of the merchant marine act. The specifications issued in this instance were approved, in substance, by the Shipping Board, the Secretary of the Navy, and the President's Merchant Marine Committee, as well as by this department, as best meeting the public necessities which are involved. I can not assent to their modification simply in the interest of a private corporation. And, since the corporation in question has declined to signify its intention or willingness to submit a bid under the present specifications, should it subsequently become eligible to do so, there would seem to be no reason for further postponing a disposition of the matter. Accordingly, I have this date awarded a contract under the advertisement of August 26 to the Overseas Railways (Inc.)."

Whatever may be the administrative responsibility under the statutes in question, it is the duty and responsibility of this office to see that appropriated moneys are expended in accordance with the law and the terms of the appropriations. You will, of course, realize that the letter of October 31, 1931, does not constitute a reply to my letter of October 24, 1931; and this office must inform you that no charges against appropriated funds will be approved for payment to the Overseas Railway (Inc.) under the contract you report as having been awarded until there have been presented the facts requested in my letter of October 24, 1931, and such facts are shown to bring the contract within the terms of the statute.

Further, it must be satisfactorily explained why a contract was entered into with the Overseas Railways (Inc.), as you have reported in your letter of October 31, 1931, when the only bid received, as reported in your letter of October 19, 1931, was from Seatrain Lines (Inc.), and the facts must be submitted showing the nationality of these corporations and the nationality or registration of the ships which are to be put into operation under the contract.

Respectfully,

J. R. McCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the conferees receded on the Senate amendment striking out the provision which was inserted when the bill was under consideration in the House forbidding the award, after March 1, 1932, of ocean mail contracts to companies operating foreign-flag ships in competition with American-flag ships. That proposition has several times passed the House. It is absolutely American; it is sound, as everyone is bound to concede; and yet this has been defeated through the influence of two or three foreign-flag lines; and I want to observe that it is a deplorable situation when two or three concerns, un-American in their practices and affiliations and in competition with American lines, can influence legislation in the American Congress and prevent the enactment of a provision which is not only in the interest of the American merchant marine but which would save the American taxpayers millions of dollars.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. And they just imported a gentleman from Germany named Lederer, who is the umpire and sole arbitrator of the whole shipping industry, including these subsidized ships.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; and I wish I had time to review the real facts in connection with this, together with some recent happenings, to show you what is taking place under the influence of those companies who defeated this provision. Of course, I realize that the House conferees were up against a difficult proposition, and know that most of them were in favor of the provision in question, which was eliminated at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended for five minutes in order that I may yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the arguments put forth by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LA GUARDIA] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] with reference, first, to the Seatrain contract, and next, with reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee that requires contracts to be let only to vessels flying the American flag, I wish to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that he has before his committee at the present time a bill the purpose of which is to regulate the matter that he is trying to foist on this appropriation bill. It is not right to put upon an appropriation bill legislation of the character offered by the gentleman from Tennessee and such as is embodied in his amendment. If he is so anxious that this legislation be enacted into law, why does he not report a bill so that it could be considered upon its merits? He told us when he made his speech on this subject and when this amendment was offered that he had a bill before his committee which embodied all and more, too, than was in the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. For a question.

Mr. DAVIS. We did report out and had passed through the House unanimously such legislation. This was put on there to fix the date after March 1, because if we waited on the other, the awards would all be made, and it would be too late.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That does not answer the question at all. I say it is bad practice, and in nine cases out of ten it results not only in confusion but in injustice.

With reference to what is said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LA GUARDIA] concerning the Seatrain contract, when the Seatrain matter first came up I was still chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I felt that the matter ought to be postponed until a further investigation could be had. I wrote a letter to the Shipping Board and asked that the contract for the loan be not then let. It was let. I based my opposition to it and my request upon a letter that had been written by the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Lamont. Mr. Lamont, immediately after he was notified of the letter that I had written to the Shipping Board not to let the contract, wrote me a letter and came to see me personally, and he said that his only object in writing the letter was for a delay until he could investigate, and now, having investigated it, he was thoroughly satisfied that the contract was regular and that it should be let to the Seatrain people. Here is the predicament that we are in with reference to the Seatrain proposition. The contracts have been let, not only for the carrying of the mail but loans have been made for the purpose of building ships, and they have two of these ships now 75 per cent completed. Suppose this transaction should be stopped to-day, what would be the result? It would result in a suit immediately in the Court of Claims for the purpose of enforcing the rights they have under the contract, and the only way that it could be defeated would be by showing that there was fraud in the letting of that contract. There is but one thing for us to do, no matter how much we may be of opinion that the comptroller should pass on these things in advance—and I am not disposed to disagree with that proposition—but this has gone too far, and the country is committed by the Postmaster General, who had the right to make this contract, and, of course, the Government is liable under this contract.

There is another thing that I want you to bear in mind. We are trying to get away from here. Everything in this report was not agreeable to me. It was not agreeable to the other conferees, but time is of the essence, and if we are to complete these appropriation bills and not have continuing resolutions, we can not waste much more time. So I ask the Members of the House to concur in this report and vote in favor of its adoption.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Are we to have an opportunity to insist upon House amendment No. 43?

Mr. BYRNS. No. The conference report must be voted either up or down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER) there were ayes 70 and noes 13.

So the conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 9: Page 11, line 20, insert: "Provided further, That not to exceed $6,000 of this appropriation is hereby made immediately available for the construction of gates at the international boundary across the highway at the port of San Ysidro, Calif."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. BYRNS a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

SUSPENSION OF ANNUAL-ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188), amending the joint resolution providing for the suspension of annual-assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska, approved June 6, 1932.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the joint resolution providing for the suspension of annual-assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska, approved June 6, 1932, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed, or improvements aggregating such amount to be made each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended as to all mining claims in the United States, including Alaska, during the year beginning at 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1931, and ending at 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1932."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will not object, because of the explanation made by my colleague, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON]; but could there not be some way when these bills are called up in this way for us to have notice, so that we may look into them? It is hard to tell the meaning of a bill, many times. I understand this is an emergency matter to correct a bill that has already passed, and I will not object to it; but it seems a little unfair to have these bills called up when those of us who are charged with the responsibility of looking into them do not have time to look into them.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Montana briefly explain the bill? I will not allow any bill to be considered by unanimous consent unless we have a brief explanation of it.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I will be pleased to explain the matter.

The law provides that on all mining claims annual-assessment work shall be done, and it shall be done between 12 o'clock noon on the 1st day of July of one year and 12 o'clock noon on the 1st day of July of the following year. The House undertook to suspend the operation of that law for a period of one year. Unfortunately, in drawing that bill, which was passed and which was signed by the President, we provided for suspension for the fiscal year, and the fiscal year not corresponding with the year beginning at 12 o'clock noon on July 1 and ending at July 1 the next year, it leaves a hiatus of 12 hours in each year. It therefore became apparent that some people would take advantage of that 12 hours and, as we call it, jump claims.

Mr. SCHAFER. This is just to correct a clerical error?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. To correct a clerical error entirely.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand it, if this is not done there might be innumerable lawsuits filed.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. There would be innumerable lawsuits filed, because between 12 o'clock to-night and 12 o'clock to-morrow there would be a thousand claims jumped.

Mr. SNELL. It must be signed by the President to-day?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. It must be signed by the President to-day, because the time expires at noon to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including at this point a letter from the Secretary of the Interior on this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Washington, June 30, 1932.

Memorandum for the Secretary.

Joint Resolution, Public, No. 23, Seventy-second Congress, approved June 6, 1932, suspends the necessity of performing annual labor or improvements from July 1, 1931, to July 1, 1932. Some question has been raised in the Western States as to whether this legislation does not leave a hiatus from the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, to the end of the year for performing annual labor on mining claims, which is 12 o'clock m. on July 1, 1932, and it is feared that during this brief period suspension will not be in force and claims might be relocated.

In my opinion the purpose of the act clearly indicated that Congress meant to relieve from the necessity of performing this work during the year ending at noon July 1, 1932. However, it should be remembered that this department can not prevent claim jumpers from physically relocating or attempting to relocate claims on the theory that the resolution does not cover the entire year. However, whatever might be the ultimate outcome of attempted relocation, the department can not prevent the relocators from bringing suits in the courts, subjecting the present owners of mining claims to long and expensive litigation. To remove any possible doubt and to obviate the trouble and expense which would result from such relocations, I suggest that you advise the House of Representatives to enact Senate Joint Resolution 188, which was passed by the Senate yesterday. This resolution, when enacted, will remove all possibility of doubt of attempted relocation and ensuing litigation.

E. C. FINNEY, Solicitor.

Approved and recommended to the attention of Speaker GARNER of the House of Representatives.

RAY LYMAN WILBUR, Secretary.

JUNE 30, 1932.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE] be excused from attendance because of illness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF AND WASTE IN GOVERNMENT

Mr. CROWE. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on two different subjects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, it is entirely useless and unnecessary for anyone to make statements concerning whether we are or whether we are not in the midst of a crisis and panic in this country. We frequently hear the statement that this crisis is world-wide, which is largely true and which has largely been true of other great panics of this country in the past; but, according to late figures and estimates, conditions in general are much worse in the United States than in any of the other nations. In fact, some of the actions of our Government have tended to increase the unemployment and stress in this country and have helped to relieve it in many of the nations of Europe and other countries.

In that respect I need only to call your attention to the Hawley-Smoot tariff law, which went into effect something over two years ago. That tariff act was not passed with the intention of raising revenue in the main. It was intended to be a barrier to shut out the goods of other nations, nations who owe us large sums of money and who could pay the same in merchandise but could not pay it in cash. What is the result? The result is that some 70 other nations of the earth have boosted their tariff rates in retaliation in the last two years, and as a consequence our export trade which was $1,129,000,000 the first three months in 1930 is reduced to $459,000,000 the first three months of 1932. In other words, for every $5 worth of goods shipped from the United States to foreign markets in 1930 we are shipping $2 worth now, and every month finds our foreign trade dwindling more and more toward the vanishing point. Canada, our best customer and friend, has increased her protection, has set up bars against us, and in other ways is discouraging the purchase of goods from the United States. England, our second largest market, has been closed to us, because we drove her in desperation to abandon her time-honored policy of free trade.

Further losses and disadvantages that have come to us on account of the enactment of this Hawley-Smoot-Hoover-Grundy tariff law have been that more than 1,000 factories have been established in other nations. The enormous sum of $1,500,000,000 has been spent by manufacturers of the United States who have been driven to establish factories in the various countries of Europe and elsewhere, thereby employing foreign workmen instead of Americans. When the goods produced by these manufacturers were made in the United States by workmen of the United States and shipped to the nations of the world, bringing in return millions in gold and merchandise desired in this country, that created a flow of trade and an exchange of commodities which is always a necessary factor toward the promotion of good times. Accordingly, one of the factors which will help restore this country to normal conditions will be to write a new tariff law which will be equitable and scientifically adjusted so that we can again rebuild trade with other nations and once more enjoy an exchange of business with the nations of the earth.

THE FARMER

With the farmers in red ink and going into bankruptcy, as they have been doing for the last 10 years, it is as impossible to have a good healthy condition of prosperity in this country as it is to lift one's self up by his own boot straps.

Many things have been told the farmers to do and not to do. The Secretary of Agriculture advised plowing under one-third of the crops. President Hoover, I am informed, while a Cabinet member, stated that the farmers should raise less and eat more. Then the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Hyde, further stated in an address before the Rotary Club in Washington that there is cultivated thirty or forty million acres of land more than is needed. At the same time we are bringing into cultivation at an enormous expense millions of acres of land by the building of Hoover Dam. That dam, of course, is to be used for power as well as the creation of more acreage. Something more has to be done for the farmer than giving him high-sounding phrases. All of the products the farmer sells are lower than they have been for 50 years. Land is far lower—if it has any value to-day—than it has been at any time during the past 50 years. Everything the farmer buys is approximately 100 to 200 per cent higher than the cost prices of 15 to 50 years ago. I refer to such essential things as machinery, clothes, shoes, taxes, and so forth.

The facts are that if this country survives, or is to continue for an indefinite period as a free country, with its motto, "A government of the people, for the people, and by the people," the farmer must be given relief, and it must be more than high-sounding phrases, and he must have an opportunity to pay off the mortgages which are to-day eating at the vitals of practically every farmer in the United States. Just what the solution is must be worked out by a Congress and a President who are in sympathy with the farmer, as well as by State legislatures, governors, and on down to the lowest official. A solution, if it means anything and accomplishes anything, must come from those who have the farmers' interest at heart.

The Secretary of the Treasury and others have attempted to throw numerous scares into Congress. One has been the scare of high income-tax rates. The Secretary of the Treasury says that there are scarcely any large incomes left; that the large incomes have dried up. If they have, why should he worry about that?

I am sure the farmers of my district, and of the entire United States, for that matter, are not going to be worried about paying income taxes for the next two years. I am of the opinion that Mr. Mills, Secretary of the Treasury, is more worried about his friends on Wall Street, the international bankers, and the New York Stock Exchange and other exchanges, than he would have us believe. Indications are that some or all of those agencies have reaped hundreds of millions of dollars in the sale of worthless bonds and securities of Europe and other countries, and have made plenty of money. I recommend that those institutions have a thorough investigation.

I consider the first thing to be done is to reduce the property taxes and not merely 10 per cent or 20 per cent but to reduce them either by revaluation or by tax rate, so that the farmer and the home owner will not be required to longer pay sums which are driving them into bankruptcy. In my opinion, the tax of the farmer and the small-home owner should be reduced by at least one-half. To be sure, that will come within the duties of the State and local taxing units, but I am sure that the farmer and owner of real estate of all kinds are going to demand drastic tax relief. Many farms are to-day assessed at $10,000, which you could not find a buyer for, either at private sale or public auction, at one-half that amount, and all other farms in proportion.

EXTRAVAGANCE AND WASTE

The expense of operation of the Government of the United States has grown by leaps and bounds. In fact, between the years of 1928 and 1932, it increased more than $1,000,000,000, the increase amounting to about 33 per cent. When things were at the highest peak, when real estate was at the highest ever known in the history of our country, property was bought by the Government in Washington, for which enormous prices were paid, and now while the country is in the midst of a great panic, the commission in Washington has only one thought apparently in mind and that is to speed the improvements in Washington and vicinity, instead of slowing up here and spreading some of this work out over the country in order to clothe and feed many who are hungry and in rags. They are drawing from every nook and corner of the United States, every town and village, money to beautify Washington, and it is not likely that one out of twenty people in my district will ever see this city, and this is true in other districts of our country. It is true Washington should be beautiful, being the Capital City of this great Nation, but such work should have been let in times of depression when things were in decline, when grounds could have been bought at fair prices, and when beautifying could have been done and used up surplus labor, but instead of that the major parts of the grounds were purchased at the high peak of prices. I can not agree with the enormous layout and expenditures in Washington, when we have hundreds of towns and cities over our country where public buildings and improvements are needed. Why not divide the work up and spread it out all over the country? Washington does not seem to know that the United States is in the midst of a panic. The powers that be seem determined to move on, recklessly spending money.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

In the year of 1910 the Department of Agriculture received an appropriation of something over $17,000,000. In 1932 this same department had appropriated to it $247,000,000. Anyone can easily figure that there are many millions of waste in that department, and the same is true in practically all of the departments of the Government. Why does not Congress change these things? They will be changed when both the House and the Senate and the President want to reduce expenses of the Government, and when we have removed from office those who are bent on expansion of the activities of the Government.

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET

For several years we have had a Budget committee whose duty it was to go over each and every committee and to reduce every possible bit of waste. This committee is directly responsible to the President. If anyone wants to know why the expenses of the Government were not reduced more this session of Congress than they were, let him ask the Budget committee why they did not reduce the various bureaus, commissions, and so forth, more than they did. Ask them why they did not put a stop to the lobbying by the numerous bureaus, bureau chiefs, and others, when the various appropriations were being debated on the floor of the House. In the face of all this, this Congress has, according to figures compiled, reduced the expenses of the Government, under the year just closed, $840,379,933.09, which is in itself an outstanding performance and merits the Nation's approval.

I have given my thoughts and efforts to find out everything that I possibly could about each and every bill that was brought before the House. I always attempt to determine what is best for the people of my district and what is best for my country. I try to find out, and do find out, in every instance on which side I should cast a vote that will be to the best interest of the common people, my constituents, and my country, and after doing so, I vote that way. I stand upon that record.

Having grown up on a farm and since that time having spent many years in business, the waste and extravagance of the Government are appalling to me. Accordingly, I have voted, and shall continue to vote at every opportunity, to reduce the waste of our Government.

USE OF INDIANA LIMESTONE AS THE NATION'S BUILDING STONE

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, in these hectic days all branches of the Government, as well as all private endeavor, is bent toward economy. Economy is the watchword; it is in everybody's mind, which is as it should be.

Even in days of economy and when going through our most serious crisis certain things are bought and consumed. A large percentage of the volume of good times continue to be used when times are hard; however, the watchword is economy.

The Government usually is accredited with being short on saving. The Federal Government is often looked upon as a good spender. This is often a mistaken idea. The Government is a buyer of good merchandise. It attempts to have its work well done. Many times these factors are not taken into consideration by the casual observer.

The Federal Government has need for many public buildings, both in Washington and in every State in the Union. It reaches out to the many kinds of building material to be had.

To-day more than heretofore they are considering price, of course, coupled with quality.

INDIANA LIMESTONE

Indiana limestone is found to be one of the best, if not the best all-around building stone, or building material, to be found anywhere. The stone is soft when quarried, is easily worked, hardens with age, and whitens, weathering beautifully.

Many State houses, memorials, and other public buildings have been built of this stone in all parts of the United States, as well as in Alaska, Canada, Mexico, and other countries. It has been said that the sun never sets on Indiana limestone. The Federal Government has used the stone in building many fine buildings here in Washington and out over the country. One of the newest and finest Federal buildings being the Department of Commerce Building in Washington, which is said to be the largest office building in the world. It is built of Indiana limestone from the hills of southern Indiana.

The Indiana limestone belt covers several counties, the principal ones being Lawrence, Monroe, Owen, and Washington Counties. The industry has many splendid firms, quarries, and mills, some of which cater to small buildings, and others large enough to handle the largest jobs to be found anywhere.

One of my committees is Public Buildings and Grounds, and this committee brings me in contact, more or less, with the public-building program of the Government. Living in the Indiana limestone belt I am greatly interested in this business, and I use every possible lead to give any service possible to the industry as a whole.

In discussing the use of Indiana limestone as a building material with the Treasury Department, I found the industry by its efficiency and fair dealing, its ability to take care of all jobs from the smallest to the largest, has forced itself in a position, so that it does not have to take a back seat, but is abundantly able through its numerous operators to handle any and all jobs in a highly satisfactory manner. This material comes in contact, of course, with all kinds of building material, particularly the various building stones.

The industry has grown to such proportion that they can pay heavy freight and go into fields of stone far inferior to Indiana limestone and yet compete in price and even underbid in many cases.

An outstanding example of its quality and endurance is a building known as the Hamers Mill, in Lawrence County, Ind., situated in Spring Mill State Park. This old 3-story mill of scabbled limestone, built in 1815, is now 117 years old, is in a perfect state of preservation. The old scabble marks look as if the master hand had made them but yesterday. It has been estimated that this stone will only erode one sixty-fourth of 1 inch in 100 years, which assures its quality as to life of wear.

The point has been frequently raised as to whether Indiana limestone is in a class and quality suitable to be used by the Government. Also does it have class and color, and will it present elegance and a striking appearance. What people and communities use it?

For modern usage I refer you to such edifices as Calvary Church, Pittsburgh; Trinity Building, New York City; Masonic Temple, Detroit, Mich.; Grand Central Terminal group, New York City; Tribune Tower, Chicago, Ill.; and many statehouses and other beautiful structures covering the entire country. All this augmented by many Federal buildings, hundreds of them in the United States, including, of course, the masterpiece in Washington, D. C., the Department of Commerce Building. For color, the beautiful buff, the gray with its aristocratic charm, and the variegated, with its gorgeous mixed colorings; all of which whiten and increase in beauty and charm as the years go by, and makes this oolitic limestone the choicest of building stone to be had anywhere.

WILL IT LAST?

Striking examples are to be found in the localities from which the stone is taken, abutments and buildings ranging from 50 to 100 or more years of age are in a perfect state of preservation. To the skeptical I refer you to Europe and other nations of the earth. In many parts of Europe are to be found structures hundreds of years of age of the identical stone, which formed ages ago when the ocean covered those countries, as it no doubt once covered those southern Indiana hills, and the deposits of billions and billions of minute animals make up these vast deposits of this splendid building stone in the rugged hills of southern Indiana. This deposit is seen to stand out for centuries in Europe in many beautiful structures.

But the first and oldest usage of this oolitic stone that geologists have any knowledge of is in Egypt in the construction of the Great Sphinx, the pyramid of Gizeh, the main parts of the temples Abydos, and the Sun Temple of Anbsir.

Beautiful limestone buildings mellowed by age are found throughout all European countries. Most of the Gothic cathedrals, now well preserved, are made from oolitic limestone, including St. Paul's, of London.

Geologists are responsible for statements that the same fine, lasting deposits of oolitic limestone found in Europe and Egypt are found in the rugged hills of southern Indiana, now known as Indiana limestone.

In fact, Egyptians used a similar limestone in the building of their fine temples, tombs, and other structures that have endured the ages. Eternity was the aim of the Egyptians. Present life was hardly to be considered; hence the use of oolitic limestone, which, no doubt by their tests, convinced them it would conform to their desires.

Strange to say, however, geologists assert that the limestone of Egypt is a much later formation, less strong, and less pure than Indiana limestone.

Accordingly, summed up in few words, I say Indiana limestone is the Nation's building stone, because it is durable, beautiful, dignified, and economical.

THE TARIFF

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD to include a short table issued by the Tariff Commission showing what has been done under the flexible provision of the tariff act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, Congress is near adjournment. We are face to face with another general election. The great national issues that may come before the voters begin to take definite form. The tariff, the historical issue between the two political parties, comes to the foreground. As in the past the tariff is one of the most important issues before the American people. It has never, in fact, been so important as at this time.

The Republican Party now as in the past stands on the protective tariff. We believe the markets of this great country of ours should be conserved for American agriculture, industry, and labor. We believe that the wages of labor in this country should be protected by limitation of immigration and by the limitation of competition in this market by limiting imports of foreign goods produced by cheap foreign labor. We believe that American capital invested in American industry and agriculture, which pays the taxes to run the Government of this country, is entitled to protection from destruction by imports of foreign commodities produced at much lower wages and living standards than maintain in the United States.

As President Hoover has recently said, there never has been a time in the more than 300 years of the history of this country when the protective-tariff policy of this country was more essential to our well-being. The protective tariff in these times of depression has prevented a tremendous influx of foreign-made products and has kept thousands and millions of men and women employed in the United States who without the tariff would have been thrown out of employment because the products which they make or grow would have been brought in from foreign countries rather than produced or grown here by American citizens.

The value of the Republican protective-tariff policy is becoming so generally recognized in these United States that even the Democratic Party no longer dares to take an open stand against it, while many of its leaders, directly and indirectly, are advocating it. Though for political reasons they refuse to admit it, they did in practical effect accept the Republican protective-tariff policy in 1928 as the best means of safeguarding domestic labor, industry, and agriculture. Furthermore, most of the leading countries of the world, even free-trade England, have adopted the protective tariff as a means of reestablishing national prosperity.

THE HAWLEY-SMOOT ACT

The tariff act of 1930 has been of tremendous value to this country during the past two years. It has prevented greater disaster from the depression that is upon us as a result of the destructions, dislocations, and disorganizations of the World War. The rates of duty established by the Congress in the act of 1930 were levied for the most part to give to American producers an opportunity to sell in the markets of the United States on an equal competitive basis with like or similar articles imported from foreign countries.

The rates in that Republican tariff act are not excessive. The average rate on dutiable and free imports was increased from 14 per cent under the Fordney-McCumber Act to an average of 15.8 per cent under the Hawley-Smoot Act, and a good part of this increase in percentage results from the lower prices of the later period rather than from increased rates in the act of 1930. Furthermore, using only comparable dutiable items the average rate was increased only 3 per cent or from 38 to 41 per cent, calculated on the basis of 1928 imports and 1928 prices to eliminate the variation in prices and imports. And finally, 68 per cent of the total imports enter free of duty under that act.

Such a tariff policy is liberal for it gives to foreign producers an opportunity to sell their products on an equal and competitive basis in the principal market or markets of the United States. Such tariff rates do not exclude nor are they intended to exclude imports from foreign countries.

On the other hand, such rates are levied for the purpose of protecting domestic producers so that they may continue in business in the United States and make a reasonable profit when they operate efficiently. This American tariff policy which has been established in this country for the greater part of the last hundred years has been largely responsible for the country's great growth, development, and prosperity, and for the satisfactory life that has been achieved in the United States.

This bicentennial year, when we are celebrating the two-hundredth anniversary of the birth of the first President of the United States, George Washington, is a fitting time to rededicate the national policy of protective tariffs that was initiated by the first President when the first revenue measure was passed by the Congress of the United States and signed by President George Washington. That was a protective tariff act.

Conditions existing then among the nations of the world may be compared with conditions existing now, in that the desire of individual nations is to become individually self-sufficing units for their own protection and preservation in a world of competition for trade. With all the nations of the world now striving to balance their budgets and to protect their home industries and to develop their own production of all important, essential commodities, it is vital that this great Nation of ours guard its American tariff policy so that we may not become the victims of international competition. If we were to throw down our national tariff barriers during this crisis, such a calamity would overtake our farm and factory workers as it would be impossible to describe. We think we have many unemployed at present. The number would be multiplied manifold were the tariff barriers to be lowered at this critical time.

FLEXIBLE TARIFF PROVISIONS

The tariff act of 1930, with its rates adjusted rather nicely in most cases to equalize the differences in costs of production in the United States and in the principal competing countries, has been a magnificent stronghold for this country during the two years of its existence. With the breadth of view and the wisdom that characterize the general features of that act there is provided also in the flexible tariff provisions the means of adjusting any rates that may be out of line with the general declared American protective-tariff policy that governed the fixing of the individual rates of the act.

The provisions of that new flexible tariff were so well conceived and so specifically defined that for the first time in the history of this great country of ours we have what accurately, are advocating it. Though for political reason they rarely may be called a scientific tariff. It is probably the first scientific tariff that has ever been established in any country in the world. The method of its operation is simple and effective.

Section 336 of the tariff act of 1930 provides that the Tariff Commission shall make investigations of any rates of duty that are out of line with the tariff policy set up in the act and that it shall report its findings to the President, specifying such changes as are necessary to accomplish the purpose of the act.

The President is authorized by the act to proclaim such changes as are specified by the Tariff Commission. The President has no authority to make any changes other than those specified by the Tariff Commission in its reports to him. He must follow the findings of the commission or make no changes whatever.

This arrangement gives new power and authority to the Tariff Commission. And more so than any other time in the history of the Tariff Commission that body is now functioning as a scientific, fact-finding body, with real efficiency and with the expedition of the cases that come before it.

In the first year of the commission's operation, after it was reorganized by President Hoover and confirmed by the Senate, the commission completed 39 reports to the President covering 72 commodities under section 336. Rates of duty were increased on 12 commodities, decreased on 17, and on 39 there were no changes. These adjustments covered an important part of the dutiable items of the act.

The imports for consumption of the products covered by these 39 investigations of the Tariff Commission constituted 13.5 per cent of the total value of all dutiable imports. The value of the imports of all the items investigated amounted to $197,600,000. The value of the imports of the 12 commodities on which the duties were increased amounted to $17,400,000. The value of the imports of the 17 items on which the duties were decreased was $43,600,000. The value of the imports of the commodities investigated and covered in reports to the President and on which no changes in rates were specified by the commission or proclaimed by the President was $136,500,000.

It is apparent from these figures that only a few of the rates in the tariff act of 1930 were out of line or needed investigating. Furthermore, nearly all of the adjustments made in the rates, whether up or down, were relatively small. These facts show that Congress had carefully adjusted the rates in the act of 1930.

The complete list of the individual investigations completed by the Tariff Commission between June 18, 1930, and November 30, 1931, are shown in table below and prove beyond question the great value of the flexible-tariff provision in the tariff act of 1930, and the excellent work of the newly reorganized Tariff Commission under those provisions. It also shows conclusively the niceness with which the rates were adjusted by the Congress in the act of 1930. These thorough scientific investigations by the Tariff Commission have in most cases substantiated the judgment of the Congress in levying the rates fixed in the act.

THE ACT OF 1930 IS JUST TO AGRICULTURE

The Republican tariff act of 1930 has been a great benefit to agriculture. Calculations based upon 1928 imports show that approximately 68 per cent of the increase of total duties made in the act of 1930 as compared with the act of 1922 is on imports of agricultural raw materials and as compensatory duties on industrial products made from such raw materials, and only 32 per cent of the total increase in duties was on industrial products. This is true even though the compensatory duties for agricultural raw materials included in the calculation are for only the products directly made from such agricultural raw materials, and not those compensatory duties for agricultural raw materials that enter into more remote finished products which in part at least may be made from the intermediate finished articles. For example, the duty on flaxseed is calculated as being compensated for in the duty on linseed oil, but the calculation of compensatory duties does not include such products as paint and linoleum that are made in part from linseed oil. The duty on hides is deducted from the duty upon leather, but a deduction was not made from the duties on shoes for the duties on hides or on leather. This calculation shows clearly that the major part of the increases in the tariff rates put into the act of 1930 as compared to the rates in the act of 1922 were put there to protect the farmers of the United States. This is a broad, wholesome tariff policy for this country to adopt and is in keeping with the general Republican policy of preserving the markets of the United States as far as that is practicable and profitable for the producers of the United States.

DEMOCRATS HAVE NO TARIFF POLICY

While the Republican Party now as always adheres to its well-defined and well-known tariff policy of protecting the domestic markets for the domestic producers, the Democratic Party has no well-defined tariff policy. In fact, it is impossible to determine what the Democratic Party actually does believe about the tariff. Their party platforms have changed so greatly during the past 20 years that no one now can say what the Democratic Party really believes about the tariff.

The leaders of the party are divided on the issue. They have been unable to formulate a tariff policy upon which even they could agree. And during this, the first session of the Seventy-second Congress, the Democratic leaders have shown their absolute impotence in handling tariff matters.

Now we find the Democrats adopting a plank in their platform at Chicago in 1932 which goes back to their old position. They declare for a competitive tariff for revenue. Whatever that means—and nobody knows—it certainly eliminates the protective tariff again from their platform. In vain we ask, what is their stand on the tariff now? No one knows.

Furthermore, they have proved to the world their insincerity in criticizing the Republican tariff act of 1930. Some of the leaders of the Democratic Party in this House and in the other Chamber and in speeches outside of these Chambers of Congress have during the past two years vehemently and vociferously attacked the Hawley-Smoot Act, charging that the rates of that act were "too high," "unjust," and "exorbitant," and that they should be adjusted. They have been careful, however, to make their charges in general terms, and they have not specified individual rates that are too high. Nor have they passed resolutions requesting the Tariff Commission to make investigations for the purpose of adjusting the specific rates which they think are too high. Yet they well know that any rates that are out of line can be readily adjusted by the Tariff Commission if they are in fact too high.

Their insincerity is further shown by their own tariff bill, H. R. 6662, which they introduced and passed in this session of Congress but which President Herbert Hoover had the good sense and wise judgment to veto and prevent from being fastened upon this country.

That bill was nothing but a tariff subterfuge. After all the leaders of the Democratic Party had fought against the rates of the tariff act of 1930, one expected that the Democratic majority in the lower House of Congress where tariff bills must originate would proceed at once when Congress convened to adjust the rates in the Hawley-Smoot Act, which they claim are "unjust," "unfair," "extreme," "exorbitant," "extremely high," "prohibitive," "embargo tariffs." The American people were entitled to know and are now entitled to know what rates of duty, according to the Democratic tariff policy, the Democrats deem are too high. Naturally the people expected the Democratic Party to indicate something of the nature of their tariff beliefs when they assumed control of this House, but the Democrats deceived them.

Our Democratic friends apparently think that they can win this coming election by tariff generalities, and that they can attract voters by such subterfuge political gestures as are in the tariff provisions of the Democratic tariff bill which they passed during this session. But, my friends, you can not deceive the American people in that way. You can not expect the American voters to buy such a "pig in the poke." The American people are not going to buy a "cat in the bag" in the election next fall. The average voter is not so stupid as you may think.

The American workmen and farmers are not ignorant of your failure to state clearly your position on these tariff rates. I want to tell you now, if you do not already know it, that during this coming campaign you will be forced to state what you expect to do with the specific rates of the tariff act before you will be entitled to any consideration whatsoever by the farmers, laborers, and manufacturers of this country interested in those specific rates. You can not get by with the general statement that you will fix things up. You will have to state specifically what rates you expect to adjust and how you expect to adjust them and what your general tariff policy will be, which of your many policies you are going to follow if elected—free trade, tariff for revenue only, competitive tariff, or tariff to equalize costs of production at home and abroad, or a protective tariff.

The Republicans and the American people know why you Democrats did not attempt to adjust the tariff rates in your tariff bill of this session, H. R. 6662. You can not agree among yourselves about rates. Some of your party leaders are free traders; some of them believe in tariffs for revenue only; and some are protectionists. When you began to discuss rates you found that each of you wanted protection for the products grown in your own districts. At the same time you wanted free trade for the products grown in districts other than your own. Those were your selfish, individualistic tariff demands.

Everyone in this country knows that. In other words, you were so selfish and inconsistent in your tariff views that you despaired of ever agreeing even among yourselves on a system of tariff rates for the country as a whole, and you failed completely in your conferences where you attempted to devise a tariff policy for use in this session of Congress and in the coming national campaign. For that reason you can not hope to obtain the confidence of the voters of this country. For that reason if for no other, in my opinion, you will be defeated in the coming election.

The average voter in this country is an intelligent person. Ours is a representative government. Voters want and have a right to know what the views of their representatives are on these tariff matters in a specific way, not in some secret, hidden, mysterious, underhanded way. Your Democratic tariff bill forfeits any claim you may make to frankness with the American people. Your inconsistencies warrant your repudiation by the American people, and I predict that you will be repudiated in November, 1932.

THE DEMOCRATIC TARIFF PROPOSAL

Now let us see what kind of a smooth, suave, and elusive tariff maverick your Democratic tariff bill is. After all of the loud-mouthed criticisms that you Democrats have heaped upon the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act, what have you proposed in this Congress by way of changes in that act?

In your tariff bill you do not suggest a single change of rates. You do not suggest a single transfer from the free to the dutiable list or from the dutiable to the free list. You do not suggest even one little change in the 15 schedules of the dutiable list nor in schedule 16, the free list. You do not even suggest the change of as much as a comma or a semicolon. Apparently you accept as satisfactory all of the rates fixed in the Hawley-Smoot Act.

You do not suggest a single change in the administrative provisions of the act.

There is only one provision of the special provisions, or Title III, of the Hawley-Smoot Act which you propose to change. Of the 41 sections in Title III, covering the special provisions of the Hawley-Smoot Act, you propose to change only one section—section 336 of that act. What a mountain of labor to bring forth something even worse than a mouse.

In other words, after all of your vicious attacks on the Hawley-Smoot Act, the Republican tariff, you apparently accept it all and approve it all except one small section covering 2½ pages out of the 194 pages of the printed act, and the one and only change which you propose to make in the Republican tariff act is in the so-called flexible-tariff provision.

According to your own admission, by your own official acts, you approve of over 99 per cent of the Hawley-Smoot act, and disapprove of only one of the 654 sections of that act. I have never seen a better demonstration of devastating inconsistency than that exhibited by the Democratic Party with respect to its tariff policy.

On the stump and in the press individually you Democrats have viciously attacked the Hawley-Smoot Act, but collectively in Congress by your official acts you approve all of its 654 sections with the exception of one lone section, that now providing for adjustment of rates to equalize costs of production in the United States and abroad by presidential proclamation after, and only after a thoroughly scientific investigation is made by the efficient and well-trained body of experts which make up the United States Tariff Commission.

Your attempts to look the voters in the face this fall and to criticize the Hawley-Smoot Act will be an amusing spectacle. The voters will be skeptical of your sincerity and will be inclined to say that you are hypocritical unless you clarify your tariff policy before you attempt to go before them and ask for their support. So far you have made such a mess of your tariff policy that at present no one can even state it or understand it.

Even in the changes that you have proposed to the one section of the tariff act which you have attempted to revise you have shown your usual inconsistency. In the first place you propose to take away from the President of the United States the power to proclaim changes in the tariff rates in accordance with the changes specified by the Tariff Commission after thoroughly investigating and reporting to him the changes required to equalize the differences in costs of production in the United States and in the principal competing foreign countries. By your proposed change you would thus destroy the fine flexibility of section 336. You would make it impossible to effect changes in rates to meet changes in economic conditions, and yet you claim to believe that it is desirable to provide for such changes in rates from time to time between general tariff revisions.

You propose that the Tariff Commission shall make its investigations and reports to the Congress and that the Congress shall then consider the proposals and decide whether or not to make the changes in rates specified in the reports of the Tariff Commission. You suggest this change knowing that the history of the tariff in Congress shows that Congress would not approve the adjustment of a single rate of duty at any one time, and that there would be no possibility of the Congress ever adjusting a single rate of duty, even if it were to save an important and necessary domestic industry.

You well know that the minute the tariff question was opened up for discussion on the floor of the Congress, and one rate of duty alone was up to be adjusted, even if it was upon recommendation of the Tariff Commission, that the representatives of every other industry in the country would be after an adjustment of the rates of duty on their products, and that Congressmen and Senators from the respective districts and States in which those industries were located would demand consideration for their particular industries, and that as a result of such demands from every section of the country general tariff revisions would result. It has always been brought about in that way whenever the subject of tariff rates has been opened up by Congress.

This proposal of the Democrats would destroy the excellent provisions of the Hawley-Smoot Act that are working so efficiently and effectively and would substitute for it this unworkable provision of the Democratic tariff bill. This is true in spite of the provision in the Democratic bill that no amendment to the recommendations of the Tariff Commission shall be considered either in the House of Representatives or in the Senate which is not germane to the items included in the report of the commission. It is obvious that the duty on hides, for example, may be considered germane to the duty on boots and shoes. The duty on leather may be ruled to be germane to the duty on saddles and harness and boots and shoes. The duty on cattle may be termed germane to the duty on hides, boots and shoes, and leather. Likewise what may be considered germane may be extended ad infinitum and include every item of the tariff act. The result would be the destruction of the fine provision for flexibility now in the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act.

Subsection 3 of the proposed amendment in the Democratic tariff bill to the flexible provision of the Hawley-Smoot Act, changing the Republican tariff, provides for a consumers' counsel. This consumers' counsel is to hold an office in the legislative branch of the Government to be known as the office of consumers' counsel of the United States Tariff Commission. He is to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. You propose that he shall represent the consuming public in any proceeding before the Tariff Commission and that he shall present evidence and arguments to support the supposed special point of view of the consumers of this country.

Now, let me ask you why we have a Tariff Commission? Does not the Tariff Commission represent the consumers of this country as well as the producers of this country? There are 6 members of the Tariff Commission—3 Democrats and 3 Republicans. Do you Democrats suppose that the point of view of the consumers of this country is not taken into consideration by the Tariff Commission? Such a conception of the commission seems to me to be quite ridiculous and without any foundation whatever.

Members of the Tariff Commission take an oath of office to perform their duties under the Constitution of the United States. They know that they must guard the public interests of this country. Are the public interests different from the consumers' interests? Everybody knows they are not.

Furthermore, do you not know that the consumers of this country are producers? Certainly they are. We all have to work to eat. Are the interests of the consumers of this country different from the interests of producers of this country? They are the same people. Unless one produces, one does not have the wherewith to consume. One must produce to earn money with which to purchase goods for consumption.

Thus only the extremely few so-called idle rich, who produce nothing with their own labors, may be considered in one narrow sense to be especially represented by the proposed consumers' counsel, for only they may be thought in any way to have an interest separate and distinct from the interests of the producers. And even the idle rich have a producer's interest, and consequently a consumer's interest, because they have to manage their funds and investments in order to obtain the income from them which gives them the purchasing power with which they become consumers.

It is obvious, therefore, that the duties which are specified in the Democratic tariff bill for the consumers' counsel are already being performed by the members of the Tariff Commission. To provide an additional counsel, with a salary of $10,000 carried in that bill, and to provide for the expenditure of large sums of money for experts to make investigations and to prepare reports for this consumers' counsel is an absolute waste of the public's money. And this at a time when this Government has had to reach out and levy over a billion dollars of new taxes in order to balance its Budget.

The consumers'-counsel provision of the Democratic tariff bill is a duplication of the work of the Tariff Commission itself, and it is an absolute waste of public money and would accomplish absolutely nothing that is not now already being accomplished by the United States Tariff Commission, which it is proposed to continue in operation in the Democratic tariff bill.

This measure drafted by the Democrats is an attempt to fool the average citizen into believing that the consumers' counsel will be some sort of a special representative and pleader of the cause of the average citizen of this country, and that he would be able to accomplish wonderful things in behalf of the man in the street that are not now being accomplished by the present excellent system for tariff adjustments. This Democratic proposal is a snare and a delusion. It is deceptive in its purposes, and when the average man in the street understands the real significance of the proposal you can rest assured that he will condemn it and repudiate the Democratic perpetrators of this terrible hoax.

Democrats will find that the man in the street has sufficient knowledge to see through such flimsy camouflage, and if he does not do so now he will do so by the time he casts his ballot this fall. The people of this country are surprised that you Democrats should expect to get away with any such misleading proposal as your consumers'-counsel provision of your proposed tariff amendment. You can not do it, gentlemen, for the average citizen has too much intelligence to be misled by such insincere gestures.

The danger of one other section of your proposed tariff amendment should be pointed out. You propose in subsection 4 for the calling of an international economic conference by the President of the United States for the purpose of—

(a) Lowering excessive tariff duties and eliminating discriminatory and unfair trade practices and other economic barriers affecting international trade; (b) preventing retaliatory tariff measures and economic wars; and (c) promoting fair, equal, and free trade between nations, but with the understanding that any agreement, treaty, or arrangement which changes any tariff then in existence, or in any way affects the revenue of the United States must first be approved by the Congress of the United States.

That subsection further provides that—

The President be, and is hereby, authorized and requested, at as early a date as may be convenient, to proceed to negotiate with foreign governments reciprocal trade agreements under a policy of mutual tariff concessions. Such agreements shall not become operative until Congress by law shall have approved them.

The United States has already participated in a number of economic conferences to "eliminate discriminatory and unfair trade practices," "prevent economic wars," and "promote fair, equal, and free trade and commercial relations among nations." Little or nothing has been accomplished by such conferences. Those conferences have made recommendations, written resolutions, but almost no practical accomplishments have resulted from their activities. Either the conferees have failed to agree upon steps that should be taken, devastating reservations to the various proposals have been made by the individual nations, or governments have failed to approve the activities or agreements of their conferees. Why drag the President of the United States to such conferences? No good could come of it, and there is always the danger in it of having all the countries who owe us money combine against us in such conferences.

The Republicans agree that all nations should adopt tariff and other policies that will promote fair and equal trade and commercial relations between nations, and that all unfair and discriminatory trade practices should be abolished. We propose, as far as possible, through our State Department and through the provisions of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act, especially sections 337 and 338, which are special provisions to handle unfair methods of competition and unfair practices in import trade and discriminations by foreign countries against the commerce of the United States, and by economic conferences of special representatives of our Government with other governments, to accomplish those results.

But to invite foreign countries into conferences with the United States for the purpose of discussing the lowering of our tariff duties as provided in subdivision (a) of this subsection 4 and to promote "free trade" as suggested in this amendment, is to invite and encourage foreign countries against whose industries our tariff rates have been put up as barriers, to criticize those tariff rates and the Government of the United States for its protective-tariff policy. That part, therefore, of this subsection 4, put in effect, would result in a betrayal of the best interests of the United States no less disastrous than if it had been conceived with treasonable intent rather than in the ignorance of the best interests of America that has always characterized Democratic tariff proposals.

When the voters of this country who are overwhelmingly in favor of the American protective-tariff policy realize what you Democrats have attempted to do by that provision of your proposed tariff amendment, they will give you such a rebuke as you have never had before. You have merited that rebuke by your attempt to join hands with foreign governments to force a reduction in the American protective-tariff rates. You can not avoid being called to task for that dangerous proposal. Your threatening proposal is a matter of record, and the American people are going to be told about that vicious proposal against the American farmers, laborers, and manufacturers.

Furthermore, your provision for the negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements under a policy of mutual tariff concessions would revolutionize our present international trade policy of fair treatment for all nations and special favors to none. It would substitute in lieu of our fine present policy special tariff concessions to each nation and thereby discriminate against all others in some or in many ways.

The United States has had some experience with reciprocal trade agreements. The Casson and Argol treaties and agreements proved to be complete fiascos and were never made effective by Congress. Congress repudiated all of them. Congress would not approve, even if they were proposed now, reciprocal treaties or agreements that might be negotiated with each of the many countries of the world with which we have international trade and commerce.

Furthermore, it is contrary to good public policy in addition to being contrary to our established international trade policy. Our present policy of fair treatment for all and special privileges to none is a much wiser and far more advantageous policy for this great diversified country of ours than the policy proposed in the Democratic tariff amendment of special trade and tariff concessions to each of the many countries with whom we trade.

Just imagine the mess we would get into in attempting to negotiate special treaties with each country. Would Massachusetts, for example, want its rates reduced on boots and shoes and textile manufactures in a trade with France or Germany for lower duties on wheat from the Northwest and cotton from the South and on other agricultural products from the West and South? Would Pennsylvania want the duties reduced on iron and steel and manufactures thereof in reciprocal trade agreements with Great Britain or Japan in a trade for reduced duties on meats, milk products, and automobiles exported to Great Britain and Japan? A mere statement of these questions illustrates the thousands of complications and dangers of misunderstanding and conflict that would be incurred in any attempt to apply this proposed provision of the Democratic tariff amendment.

The people of the United States will not permit it to be adopted or put into practice. If they should do so, they would soon find themselves in another world war, where they would be left practically alone, with all the other great nations of the world allied against them. This would be the natural consequence of the proposed Democratic tariff policy, because the United States market is by far the biggest and most important market in the whole world and all the other nations of the earth are striving by every means available to them to gain for their products as much as possible of this great American market.

The Democratic Party must answer to the American people in the coming campaign for this monstrous proposal by which the fair and just historical American international trade policy would be thrown away for the dangerous policy of bickering and bargaining contained in this proposed amendment. The American people have had enough of conflict. The destructive gloom of the last war is not yet forgotten, and no one who sees this Democratic proposal in its true light will agree that it should be substituted for the present fair, equal, and friendly foreign-trade policy of this country.

Mr. President and Members of Congress, the great Republican Party, to which I have the honor to belong, challenges the Democratic Party to take this tariff issue before the voters of the Nation in the coming national election. We shall take it before the Nation. Each party must stand on its record. We have no fear of the outcome.

When the average voter understands the proposals of the Democratic Party to abolish our traditional and eminently successful Republican protective tariff and our present eminently successful foreign-trade policy, they will vote to maintain the Republicans in power in this Nation and throughout the States and to thus maintain the protective tariff and our splendid American foreign-trade policy.

FOREIGN TARIFFS NOT RETALIATORY AGAINST UNITED STATES TARIFF

Tariffs in most countries of the world have been increased since the World War. International trade has expanded greatly in the past 10 years in spite of or because of the general upward tariff trend. Decreases in customs duties by any country have been comparatively few and unimportant. However, tariff duties have not been the most decisive factor in determining the volume of trade carried on with a given country. The extent to which tariffs have restricted imports has depended more on the buying power of the importing country, on the producers' costs of production, and on the importers' profit margin.

In most countries of the world duties have been increased much more on manufactured articles than on agricultural products. As has been shown, however, the greater part of the increase in the duties collected under the Republican tariff act of 1930 were on agricultural products and compensatory duties for the rates on those agricultural products. Throughout the rest of the world, however, duties on raw materials are comparatively low and the cases in which they have been raised are not numerous. In a few countries, however, agricultural rates especially have been raised. Generally speaking, the upward trend of tariff rates in countries other than the United States has been due in the majority of cases wholly to the imposition of higher rates on manufactured articles.

The Democratic Party in the United States has attempted to mislead the people of the United States into believing that the Republican tariff of 1922 is responsible for the beginning of the erection by the other countries of the world of these high tariff walls. The facts belie their charges. The charge is not true, as is easily and satisfactorily proved by an examination of the records of tariff adjustments as reported by the United States Department of Commerce.

Immediately after the World War, even before the United States passed the emergency tariff act of 1921, nearly all European tariffs were increased. France, Germany, and Great Britain had increased their customs duties before the Congress of the United States had passed the tariff act of 1922, or even before the emergency tariff act of 1921. It is obvious, therefore, that other countries of the world rather than the United States are responsible for the present trend of increased tariff rates. The United States is not responsible for beginning the raising of these barriers. European countries began immediately after the war to establish themselves as independent, self-sufficing, commercial and industrial units by erecting higher tariff walls.

Since 1922 the countries of Europe, Asia, and South America for their own reasons have increased their tariffs several times, but there is no evidence showing that these increases in tariff rates were retaliatory against the United States tariff act of 1922.

It is equally true that the increased tariff rates of foreign countries since the passage of the tariff act of 1930 are not in retaliation for the increased rates of the United States tariff act of 1930. Careful observation will prove to the satisfaction of any reasonable man that such increases in foreign tariffs have been for the purpose of fostering industry and prosperity in foreign countries. There have been numerous and conspicuous increases of import duties by foreign countries on export products of the United States since the passage of the tariff act of 1930. Such increases, however, have not been more numerous than they have been over like periods in years preceding the passage of the United States tariff act of 1930.

Furthermore, examination of the changes made by foreign countries in their tariffs will show that in most cases the increased duties levied by those foreign countries were not directed exclusively or even primarily against the United States. This is made plain by the fact that the increased rates have applied equally, or even more heavily, against the same articles imported from other countries. And in most cases the articles subject to the increased duties of foreign countries are imported in larger quantities from some country other than the United States. It is apparent, therefore, that such duties were not increased in retaliation for the duties imposed by the United States. The countries of Europe have built up tariffs against each other as have the countries of South America. Most of the countries have needed additional revenue to balance their budgets and have for this reason been forced to increase their tariffs in order to raise additional revenue.

Furthermore, in times of depression when international confidence wanes and is at low ebb, nations desire to become more self-sufficing and naturally withdraw more to themselves where they can manage and control their own affairs rather than spread out over the whole world. The present depression, which is the result of the terrible destruction of the implements of production and the frightful dislocation of the elements of labor that were brought about as a result of the World War, is largely responsible for this lack of confidence which has resulted in increased tariff barriers. This tendency toward increased tariffs throughout the world, as stated above, began in Europe after the World War. The United States was compelled by force of circumstances to fall in line with this tendency or be the victim of the other countries of the world in the wild scramble for markets for their products.

OUR PROTECTIVE TARIFF SHOULD BE MAINTAINED, NOT LOWERED TO HELP FOREIGNERS

The Democratic Party would now have us believe that it is for the best interest of this country to lower our tariffs and thus make it possible for foreign countries to sell more goods in the United States. Does anyone in the United States believe that if the United States were to proceed forthwith to lower its tariff rates that any other country in the world would follow suit and lower its tariff rates? No one who has traveled abroad or who knows anything about conditions in other countries is gullible enough to believe any such nonsense.

If the United States were to lower its tariff barriers after the election of 1932, every country in the world would make an immediate scramble to capture this great and marvelous market in the United States. They would immediately proceed to increase their manufactures and production of agricultural products for this market. Their production would increase and their exports to this country would increase, and such imports into the United States would force the closing of more American factories and the abandonment of more American farms and would greatly increase misery and unemployment in this country. Any man with any practical sense knows that this would be the result.

For that reason it is imperative not only that the American protective tariff system be maintained but that such adjustments be made from time to time under the flexible provision of the tariff act of 1930 as are found to be necessary in order to protect domestic producers in our own markets and to encourage the development of new industries in this country that have reasonable prospects for success. Only in this way will we ever be able to work ourselves out of the present depression and to hold our own against the extreme competition which the products of the United States are subjected to not only in foreign markets but are subjected to within the boundaries of this country itself.

There is no use of attempting to glibly pass the buck from one country to another, each country blaming the other for the increased tariff barriers. Historical chronology shows that the European countries began this competition in so-called high protective tariffs, and the United States was forced by the circumstances to fall in line in order to save itself from the destructive competition of its foreign competitors.

The Republican Party is delighted to go to the bat in this coming election on the tariff issue. The Democrats have been very solicitous of the foreign trade of the United States. They have argued that the tariff act of 1930 is responsible for the decrease in our foreign trade. As a remedy they urge that we lower our tariff barriers to permit greater foreign imports and to permit foreign governments thus to repay their debts to us. What a betrayal of the interests of America. In effect, our Democratic friends argue that American farmers and American laborers should quit work and go hungry to permit laborers in Europe and Asia to go back to work manufacturing and growing products to send into the United States for consumption here in lieu of the home-produced articles. The effect of their argument about the debts is that the American taxpayers should take over these foreign debts and pay them themselves in order that the foreigners may have more money to buy more goods in the United States and more money to build up greater armaments. And that the United States should continue to conduct their affairs for the further profit and pleasure of foreigners and of the foreign governments.

All the Republican Party desires is that this point of view be made known generally throughout the United States, and we shall rely with entire confidence on the answer of the American voters next November. Let the Democrats argue the cause of the foreigner. Republicans are interested primarily in America and in Americans. We believe in "America for Americans." This country and its resources we maintain are our own, for our own use, and we do not owe anybody else for them nor are we obliged to see that all the rest of the world prospers first and we last.

The exports of the United States amount to only 5 or 6 per cent of the total trade of the United States. Both imports and exports, or our total foreign trade, amount to but 9 or 10 per cent of the trade that goes on within the boundaries of the United States. The Republican Party is far more interested in the 90 per cent of our trade and commerce than it is in the 9 or 10 per cent which constitutes our foreign trade.

The Democratic Party may ask the support of foreigners interested in the United States markets. Internationalists, primarily interested in foreign investments, may contribute to the Democratic campaign funds and help the Democratic Party out a great deal if the Democratic Party will lower our tariffs; but the Republican Party is interested primarily in those persons who carry on the 90 per cent of the trade and commerce that goes on within the boundaries of the United States, not to the exclusion of the other 9 or 10 per cent that constitutes the international trade but knowing that if the 90 per cent of our trade prospers the other 9 or 10 per cent is bound to prosper.

The Democratic Party will have to answer to the American citizens for its facetious solicitude for the citizens of foreign countries at the expense of the well-being of the American farmers, laborers, and manufacturers. The responsibility rests upon the Democratic Party for fallacious and destructive propaganda in this country and we feel certain that the American voter will show his vigorous disapproval of the Democratic attempt to sell out our American interests to foreigners. To the Republicans must go the credit for our present warm and fine official international relations.

The United States is on friendly terms with all the countries of the world. The tariff act of 1930 has not created ill will toward the United States. The treaty status of this country with other countries is favorable to the United States. At the present time the United States has commercial treaties or agreements in effect with 44 countries, assuring the products of the United States more favorable tariff treatment than is accorded to similar products of any other country. These 44 countries include most of the important commercial countries of the world. Some of these treaties make specified exceptions to "most-favored-nation" treatment. Our treaty with England assures the most-favored-nation treatment only in the "European territory of Great Britain." The United States makes an exception of its commerce with Cuba, the Panama Canal Zone, and any territory or possession of the United States. Spain excepts its trade with Portugal. Portugal excepts its trade with Spain and Brazil.

With 19 countries with which the United States has no treaties nor agreements our products receive the same tariff treatment as similar products imported from all other foreign countries. Only three countries—Canada, France, and Salvador—give more favorable tariff treatment to other foreign countries than to the United States. These discriminations against the foreign commerce of the United States are really unimportant when compared with the fair treatment given this country by these same three countries with respect to most of our exports to those countries.

It is important to remember these broad, general facts which show the splendid, friendly relations enjoyed at the present time by the United States in its contacts with other countries under the provisions of the Republican tariff act of 1930, the so-called Hawley-Smoot Act. These facts show that the criticisms of the Democrats are quite unwarranted and without factual foundation. They are like so many other of their criticisms of the Republican tariff policy—they are meaningless generalities which will not stand up under a searching analysis of the facts as they actually exist.

The Republican tariff policy has not created animosity toward this country, but our tariff has been the envy of every country in the world. Most countries have observed the success of the Republican tariff policy in bringing prosperity to the United States and have adopted the protective-tariff policy in their attempts to obtain for themselves and their respective countries the blessings that have been obtained through that policy by the United States.

There is no ground for anxiety about the peace between the United States and other countries being upset by the Republican tariff policy. Such policies have been responsible for bringing the United States up to its present powerful position among the nations of the world, where we command their respect and admiration. They may envy us our advantages; they may and undoubtedly do desire to take them away from us if they can. Failing this, they will adapt themselves and their trade to our tariff and other standards.

The mutual advantages of trade between countries are too great to be thrown away for the sake of sentiment. No foreign country wants to incur the enmity of the United States. No foreign country wants to lose its share of this great American market. No other market in the world is able to purchase and pay for as large a volume and variety of imported products. It is unreasonable to think that any foreign country wants a tariff war with the United States, and we know that this country, at least that part of it represented by the great majority of the citizens who are Republicans, knows that this country does not want a tariff war with any other country.

We also know that we are not going to let any foreign country put anything over on us if we can prevent it. We shall stand up for our rights. That is the traditional American policy, always sponsored by the grand old Republican Party.

International commercial rivalry is keen. All countries are striving for business, and they are using all the resources at their command to get it. Not only are they using such instruments as the tariff, commercial treaties, aggressive foreign-sales policies, cartels, and international banking facilities, but every other legitimate means to further their own interests, often at the expense of competing nations.

In spite of these intense commercial rivalries and in spite of the almost terrifying competition for international trade that is bound to come as confidence is restored and business revived, yet the peace of the world at the present time is sound and it is not in danger of being upset soon. Certainly the tariff and commercial policies of the United States are among the least offensive of all when compared with the tariff and commercial policies of other countries of the world.

There is no reason to and no one should expect the United States to play Santa Claus to all the rest of the world, even if our Democratic opponents do suggest it. When the citizens of the many nations throughout the world understand the comparative liberality of the American tariff and trading policy they can have but admiration rather than criticism for this country.

The equal and fair treatment accorded all nations by the United States promotes good will. Our treaties give all nations most-favored-nation treatment. Two-thirds of all the imports into the United States from all countries enter free of duty, and on the one-third of our imports the rates of duty are moderate and all ad valorem rates are assessed on the foreign value. Furthermore, the administration of the law applies to all countries alike.

No other country in the world permits citizens of foreign countries to present their own tariff cases in person before such a tribunal as we have established in our Tariff Commission. Such facts when known generally throughout the world will give to the United States first place among the nations granting fair, just, and liberal treatment in their tariff and trade relations with other countries.

For these policies the Republican Party is largely responsible. We are proud of our record. The achievements of the Republican tariff policy are largely responsible for making us what we are, the greatest nation on the face of the earth.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, much has been said during this session of Congress as to governmental expenditures and the possibilities of reducing the same. A great deal of false information has been sent out all over the country by influential business interests as to how much expenditures have increased since 1927. The blame for the great increase in expenditures has been placed largely upon the shoulders of the present Congress.

In order that the Members of Congress and the country should have the real facts I have prepared a statement which will show the actual expenditures for 1927, 1931, 1932, and the appropriations for 1933. In the 1933 figures used I have given the figures in the appropriation bills as passed by the House in the legislative and War Departments. All other figures used are those in the appropriation bills as finally approved by the Senate. I have estimated the public-debt requirement at $1,000,000,000. The totals in the 1933 figures amount to $4,144,236,458, from which must be deducted the savings in the economy bill, estimated to amount to $150,000,000. This would make the net appropriations for 1933, $3,994,236,458. [Applause.]

By comparing the figures in the following table it will be seen that this Congress has reduced governmental expenditures for 1933 under those of 1932 by over $840,000,000. No previous Congress has ever made such a record. Further reductions no doubt can be made by reorganizing governmental departments, by elimination of duplications in governmental activities, and by use of greater care in State-aid appropriations. The table follows:

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a table which will illustrate my idea.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object providing the gentleman will insert with the table a statement showing just where the Democratic Party is going to cut an additional billion dollars a year from the expenditures of the Federal Government.

Mr. LAMNECK. I have never claimed that could be done.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman's party in convention yesterday promised to do so. About half the expenditures of the Federal Government are interest and sinking fund on the Democratic war debt and for the care of the veterans of the Democratic World War, leaving about $2,000,000,000 for other purposes, and yesterday the gentleman's party promises to cut off another billion each year. I would like to know the way in which that can be done so it will appear in the table in the RECORD.

Mr. LAMNECK. The gentleman can not ask me to do that, because I never claimed it could be done.

Mr. SCHAFER. Then I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

PROHIBITION

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the Democrats in their national convention at Chicago adopted their platform on prohibition, which, in part, says:

We favor the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

To effect such repeal, we demand that the Congress immediately propose a constitutional amendment to purely representative conventions in the States called to act solely on that proposal.

Pending repeal, we favor immediate modification of the Volstead Act to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer and other beverages of such alcoholic content as is permissible.

Now, this House is controlled by the same party, and we are in session. I, therefore, call upon the Speaker and the Democrats of the House to act upon the mandate of their party and pass the repeal resolution now before we adjourn. The Democrats can do this. They have a majority and control the Judiciary Committee, where several repeal resolutions are now pending, and where also many bills are pending to amend the prohibition enforcement act, authorizing the manufacture and sale of a 2.75 per cent beer. Unless the Democratic House, the Speaker, and its Democratic Members will do this, then we must agree that the action of the Democratic Convention yesterday was just "molasses to catch flies" and a scheme to corral the wet votes so the party can get into office; and that when they are in we will have but a repetition of what took place in this session, when we had a chance to consider the question of repeal and a modification of the enforcement act, and a majority of the Democrats voted against it.

We know what the vote was then of the Members of the solid Democratic South, as well as many other Democratic Members. In my judgment, if a majority of the people vote for the Democratic ticket on the theory that it means the end of prohibition, they will be greatly deceived. To prove this charge, I need only to call your attention to the action of the present House. If the next House, chosen at the November election, is Democratic, they will do the same thing upon prohibition they did in the present one—nothing. They will ignore their national platform and vote upon this question as they have in the past.

I mean, of course, a majority of them, and it is the majority that organizes and controls legislation, both in the Judiciary Committee, where this legislation originates, as well as the Democratic caucus and the House itself. It is my sincere belief that there will be no repeal or modification until the Republicans are in control of both branches of Congress. To prove this, I cite the vote of the Democrats when we had prohibition up recently.

On March 14, 1932, the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, by a vote of 227 to 187, declined to discharge the Judiciary Committee from consideration of the Beck-Linthicum resolution which proposes to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to allow the various States to permit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors within their borders. The Democrats who voted against this proposition were as follows:

Steagall, Jeffers, Patterson, Oliver, Allgood, Almon, Huddleston, and Bankhead, of Alabama; Driver, Fuller, Wingo, Ragon, Parks, Miller, and Glover, of Arkansas; Green, Yon, and Owen, of Florida; Parker, Cox, Crisp, Wright, Ramspeck, Rutherford, Tarver, Brand, Wood, Vinson, Lankford, and Larsen, of Georgia; Parsons and Keller, of Illinois; Greenwood, Crowe, Canfield, Gillen, Larrabee, and Ludlow, of Indiana; Ayres, of Kansas; Moore, of Kentucky; Sandlin, Wilson, Kemp, and Overton, of Louisiana; Rankin, Doxey, Whittington, Busby, Collins, and Hall, of Mississippi; Romjue, Lozier, Milligan, Hopkins, Dickinson, Johnson, Nelson, Cannon, Barton, and Fulbright, of Missouri; Morehead, Norton, and Shallenberger, of Nebraska; Warren, Kerr, Abernethy, Pou, Clark, Doughton, Bulwinkle, and Weaver, of North Carolina; Disney, Hastings, Cartwright, McKeown, Swank, Johnson, and McClintic, of Oklahoma; Haines, of Pennsylvania; Hare, Dominick, McSwain, Stevenson, Gasque, and Fulmer, of South Carolina; McReynolds, Mitchell, Byrns, Eslick, Browning, Cooper, and Davis, of Tennessee; Patman, Dies, Sanders, Rayburn, Sumners, Johnson, Briggs, Garrett, Cross, Lanham, Williams, Thomason, Blanton, and Jones, of Texas; Bland, Lankford, Burch, Woodrum, Fishburne, and Flannagan, of Virginia; Hill, of Washington; Hornor, of West Virginia.

It will thus be seen that on the Beck-Linthicum resolution, 114 Democrats, a majority of its membership in the House voted "no."

On May 23, 1932, we voted upon the question of 2.75 per cent beer. The Democrats who voted against this were as follows:

Almon, Bankhead, Hill, Huddleston, Jeffers, McDuffie, Paterson, and Steagall, of Alabama; Driver, Fuller, Glover, Miller, Parks, Ragon, and Wingo, of Arkansas; Taylor of Colorado; Brand, Cox, Crisp, Lankford, Larsen, Parker, Ramspeck, Tarver, Vinson, Wood, Wright, and Mobley, of Georgia; Gillen, Greenwood, and Ludlow, of Indiana; Keller, Rainey, and Parsons, of Illinois; Green, of Florida; Ayers, of Kansas; Carden, Cary, Gilbert, Gregory, Moore, and Vinson, of Kentucky; Sandlin and Wilson, of Louisiana; Goldsborough, of Maryland; Busby, Ellzey, Collins, Doxey, Hall, Rankin, and Whittington, of Mississippi; Barton, Dickinson, Fulbright, Johnson, Lozier, Nelson, and Romjue, of Missouri; Morehead and Norton of Nebraska; Bulwinkle, Clark, Doughton, Lambeth, Pou, Warren, and Weaver, of North Carolina; Kniffin, Polk, Underwood, and West, of Ohio; Cartwright, Disney, Hastings, Johnson, McKeown, and Swank, of Oklahoma; Stull, of Pennsylvania; Dominick, Fulmer, Gasque, McSwain, and Stevenson, of South Carolina; Blanton, Briggs, Cross, Dies, Garrett, Johnson, Jones, Lanham, Patman, Sanders, Sumners, Thomason, and Williams, of Texas; Browning, Byrns, Cooper, Davis, Eslick, and McReynolds, of Tennessee; Bland, Burch, Fishburne, Flannagan, Montague, Smith, and Woodrum, of Virginia; Hill, of Washington; Hornor and Smith, of West Virginia.

We find that the total number of Democrats to vote against this proposition of 2.75 per cent beer were 113, which is a majority of the Democratic Members of the House.

Most of the Democrats who thus indicated their opposition to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, or to the modification of the enforcement act so as to have 2.75 per cent beer, will be in the next Congress, because they come from rock-ribbed Democratic States. Will these gentlemen change their position upon this question? So far, I have not heard any of them rise in their places in this House and make a statement to that effect. I submit, therefore, that if the people of the Northern, Eastern, Western, and Middle States desire to get rid of prohibition, their hope lies in voting for the Republicans for the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, while I am on the subject of the Democratic National Convention, I would like to add a word of commendation for the women delegates to both the Democratic and Republican National Conventions in voting most generally, along with the men delegates, to rid the country of this curse.

It has been slanderously said that the women of America are responsible for the prohibition law. To add insult to injury, it has been said that as long as the nineteenth amendment remains in the Constitution the eighteenth amendment will not be repealed. I use the word "slanderously" advisedly. To attribute to American womanhood responsibility for the enactment and perpetuation of a law that has dragged the honor of this Nation through the slime of corruption and degradation, that has uprooted respect for law and authority of government, and has brought upon us the stigma of being incomparably the most criminal nation on earth is one of the most vicious and unjust slanders that could fall from human tongue.

Throughout the ages women have fought for the honor and integrity of their sex; for the purity of their children; and for the inviolability of their homes. To charge them with responsibility for the prostitution of their Government is to charge them with a lack of intelligence and patriotism. They are as much concerned with the honor of the Republic as they are with the honor of their firesides.

To the mothers of America is entrusted the educational and moral training of the children, and they would be recreant to their duty if they failed to use the ballot box to give the youth and the homes of the land the protection of sound and practical legislation.

Prohibition is an attempt to substitute the authority of government for the motherhood of America in the moral training of the young. It is an attempt to do, by an act of Congress, only what can be done at the family fireside. It is an attempt to legislate morality into the human race by statute.

St. Paul, the wisest of the Bible philosophers, wrote to the Galatians, "for if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain." You may substitute the prohibition law for the philosophy and teachings of Christ, if you wish, but you will find it as true to-day as when St. Paul wrote it, that righteousness does not come by law. You will substitute the law of force and the jail for the love, the kindness, devotion, and watchful care of mother, if you adhere to the prohibition standard, but I make the assertion that you can not develop real manhood and real womanhood by the yardstick of law—backed up by the compulsion of the policeman's club and the prison.

Let us put under the microscope of critical analysis the result of 10 years' effort to substitute an act of Congress for the wisdom of the mothers of America in the development of the character of our citizens and the perpetuity of our republican form of government. Let us see whether an attempt to legislate wholesale abstinence into the American people has produced better results, from the standpoint of the home and the Government, than the teaching of temperance at the family fireside.

SAVANNA-SABULA BRIDGE CO.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 4874) to grant a right of way or easement over lands of the United States within the Upper Mississippi River Wild Life and Fish Refuge to the Savanna-Sabula Bridge Co., a corporation, for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a highway between Savanna, Ill., and Sabula, Iowa, now on the Speaker's table, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may we have the bill read? If this is a private toll bridge, I shall object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate the construction, maintenance, and operation of a highway, connected with the bridge across the Mississippi River at Savanna, Ill., authorized by section 2 of the act of Congress of June 10, 1930 (Public, No. 330, 71st Cong.), between Savanna, Ill., and Sabula, Iowa, there is hereby granted to the Savanna-Sabula Bridge Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, a right of way or easement for highway purposes not exceeding 325 feet in width over lands of the United States in section 8, township 84 north, range 7 east, fifth principal meridian, in Jackson County, Iowa, reserved or acquired for the purposes of the Upper Mississippi River Wild Life and Fish Refuge, said right of way or easement being located as shown on "Plan of bridge site and new roadway for Savanna-Sabula Bridge project, November 16, 1931," attached to and made a part of a certain agreement entered into on the 23d day of December, 1931, between the said Savanna-Sabula Bridge Co. and E. C. Hotchkiss, acting superintendent Upper Mississippi River Wild Life and Fish Refuge, pursuant to a certain permit issued to the said Savanna-Sabula Bridge Co. by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce November 30, 1931, to construct, maintain, and operate the aforesaid highway over the aforesaid lands of the United States in the Upper Mississippi River Wild Life and Fish Refuge: Provided, That there is reserved to the United States in perpetuity, control of all game, fur-bearing animals, wild birds, and other wild life on the right of way or easement herein granted, and such right of way or easement shall at all times be subject to regulations prescribed under authority of the Upper Mississippi River Wild Life and Fish Refuge act of June 7, 1924 (U. S. C., title 16, ch. 8): Provided further, That in consideration of the granting of this right of way or easement no toll or other charge shall be exacted by the grantee, its successors or assigns, from any of the officers and employees of the United States, including their vehicles, for traversing the aforesaid bridge, or the highway or approach thereto or the right of way or easement hereby granted, while on official duty: And provided further, That said right of way or easement shall not be used, except by special permission of the Secretary of Agriculture, for any purpose other than the construction, maintenance, and operation of said highway, including the fencing of said right of way and diversion of the water in the adjacent stream: Provided further, That the grantee shall at all times permit officers and employees of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce, of the United States, when in discharge of their official duties in relation to said Upper Mississippi Wild Life and Fish Refuge, free and unobstructed access to, through, and over said highway.

Sec. 2. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Savanna-Sabula Bridge Co., its successors and assigns; and any corporation or person to which or to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

Sec. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has a similar bill been considered by any House committee?

Mr. ARNOLD. An identical bill was considered by the Committee on Agriculture of the House and reported unanimously. That bill is now on the calendar.

Mr. MAPES. And it is an identical bill?

Mr. ARNOLD. It is an identical bill; yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

CLOSING VIRGINIA AVENUE

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12768) to authorize the closing of a portion of Virginia Avenue SE., in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to permit the consolidated use of certain properties now owned and/or being acquired by the Washington Gas Light Co. and more particularly for the purpose of providing for the immediate construction of a gas holder and certain other important and beneficial improvements by the Washington Gas Light Co., and further, to protect the approaches to the Anacostia Park and to provide for future and adequate access thereto, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to close and abandon for highway purposes all that part of Virginia Avenue comprised within the area lying between the east line of Thirteenth Street SE., the south line of M Street SE., and the north line of Water Street SE.: Provided, That the written consent of the owners of all the property in square east of 1025 and square south of 1048 abutting on portion of highway herein authorized to be closed shall first be obtained.

Sec. 2. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, further authorized to permit the Washington Gas Light Co. to use certain portions of the part of Virginia Avenue herein provided to be closed and abandoned, and the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit the said company to use certain portions of United States reservations Nos. 129 and 130, aggregating in all approximately 57,000 square feet of area: Provided, That said use shall be permitted only so long as the Washington Gas Light Co. or its successors continue the manufacture or distribution of gas for municipal and general consumption at its so-called east station, now located south of Virginia Avenue and between Twelfth and Fourteenth Street SE.: And provided further, That the portions of Virginia Avenue and of United States reservations Nos. 129 and 130 permitted to be used shall first be approved by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the same shown on a plat prepared by the surveyor of the District of Columbia, approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and ordered by said commissioners recorded in the office of said surveyor.

Sec. 3. In consideration of the use of said portions of Virginia Avenue and of said portions of United States reservations Nos. 129 and 130, the Washington Gas Light Co. shall convey and/or quitclaim to the United States and guarantee title against all claimants, except the United States, the following-described properties in squares east of 1025 and south of 1048.

The Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital is hereby authorized to accept for the United States title to the foregoing lands in squares east of 1025 and south of 1048 and to certify to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia receipt of satisfactory conveyance and/or title before said commissioners shall authorize the use by the Washington Gas Light Co. of the portion of Virginia Avenue as hereinbefore provided.

Sec. 5. The conveyance and/or quitclaim to the United States of the foregoing lands shall constitute full consideration for the use by the Washington Gas Light Co. of said approximately 57,000 square feet of land within the part of Virginia Avenue provided to be closed and within United States reservations Nos. 129 and 130. The use of this land under the conditions set forth shall in no way affect the title to this property now owned in fee and so retained by the United States.

Sec. 6. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman from Virginia make some explanation of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that comes from the Committee on the District of Columbia as an emergency measure. It comes to you approved by the Public Utilities Commission of the District, the District Commissioners, and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. The purpose of the bill is to close a certain street and permit the gas company to use that street in the neighborhood of its present gas tanks. The emergency feature of the measure arises from this cause: It was discovered during the past winter that the capacity of the gaslight plant in the District of Columbia had so nearly been reached that it is seriously feared that unless a new gas tank is erected immediately that during the coming winter there will be danger of a serious shortage of gas for illuminating and cooking purposes.

There is, of course, objection to the erection of gas tanks anywhere, and that was the reason this measure came to you so late, because until last week the Public Utilities Commission did not make any determination, as I understand it, as to the location of this tank.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is that practically all this bill does?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. It closes a street.

Mr. PATTERSON. It closes Virginia Avenue.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. A portion of Virginia Avenue, with the consent of the property owners. It permits the gas company to erect its tank upon that street but reserving the fee in the Government, and also permits it to use two other small parcels of Government land, but in return for that use the gas company conveys to the Government in fee simple certain other lands which the officials consider more desirable for their purposes.

Mr. SNELL. Is this agreeable to all the commissioners?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. It is recommended by the commissioners, by the Utilities Commission, and the Park and Planning Commission.

Mr. PATTERSON. A recommendation by the Public Utilities Commission does not seem to me to be a strong recommendation.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Of course, we must rely upon some governmental agency to perform these functions.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill shows that the gaslight company is to give certain lands in return for the lands that the Government gives to them. I am concerned as to the value of the lands that they give to the Government and the lands the Government gives in exchange. What has the gentleman to say as to the comparative values of the exchange of properties?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I will say that all of the properties are located in close proximity. In the land which the gas company is to get the use of there are something like 5,000 square feet, while in the lands specified to be conveyed to the Government in fee simple there are something like 3,200 square feet. There are less square feet that the Government will get in fee simple than the gas company will get the use of, but the bill contains a provision to the effect that there shall be such further consideration in the way of exchange of lands as the National Capital Park and Planning Commission shall require. In other words, there is to be additional land, and some discretion is to be left in this Government agency.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this property located in the so-called Buzzards Point district?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. No. It is near the Anacostia River where the present gas tanks are. There are three gas tanks in that location now.

Mr. STAFFORD. This will be erected in the immediate vicinity of the three existing gas tanks?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman believes the Government's interests are properly safeguarded?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am convinced of that, else I would not present the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9349) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, insist on the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, yesterday I asked the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] about the action of the Senate in reducing the appropriations 10 per cent and especially as to this bill, inquiring whether or not in reducing the amount, they applied an equal amount of what they expected to save by reason of the furlough plan or the pay-cut plan. This morning I received a telegram which requested me to get some information from the Department of Justice as to the meaning of a circular which had reached the Federal judges in St. Louis. The circular announced that the messengers of the Federal judges had been furloughed indefinitely. I called up the Department of Justice and was informed by an assistant to the Attorney General that the circular applies throughout the United States, and that over 300 Federal judges would be deprived of their messengers by reason of the reduction in the appropriation. Can the gentleman say whether that is going to apply generally throughout the various departments included in this bill?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am advised that there will be a number of employees furloughed. I do not know how many nor for what length of time.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. There are over 300 in this list alone and the furlough referred to starts to-night, and the furlough, according to the information I have received, will be for at least one year. This supports my contention that thousands of Government employees are going to lose their positions. I insisted that regardless of what plan was adopted employees would lose their positions. This was denied by some, but I insisted then and I insist now you can not reduce the annual appropriation bills over $800,000,000 and retain all the employees now on the roll. I am not discussing the merits of the reductions; I am simply showing that my previous contention appears to be correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees:

Messrs. OLIVER of Alabama, GRIFFIN, CANNON, WOODRUM, SHREVE, and TINKHAM.

THE TARIFF

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and in doing so I may find it necessary to use some excerpts and figures from the Tariff Commission and the Department of Commerce, and I, therefore, ask unanimous consent to include them in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, the Democratic Party during the past 24 years has advocated no less than four different types of tariff—for revenue only, a scientific tariff, a competitive tariff, and a semiprotective tariff in 1928 comprise the list.

At the Chicago convention in June, 1932, they declared for a competitive tariff for revenue, the word "only" being discarded, as was Gov. Al Smith, who was their ideal leader in 1928, and who declared that the policy of protection was part of his platform. Both Smith and Raskob notified the business world and the wage earners that they had nothing to fear from the Democratic policy on tariff. In 1928 the Democratic platform stated that "Actual difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, with adequate safeguard for the wage of the American laborer, must be the extreme measure of every tariff rate." This promise to American labor has also been thrown into the discard and is conspicuous by its absence in the 1932 platform.

Ever since the Hawley-Smoot bill became a law the Democratic Party has made it their attack objective and have fairly exhausted their vocabulary in their endeavor to coin new denunciatory epithets. In the press and on the platform they notified the American people that when they come in power they would so drastically reduce its "unconscionable rates" that it would be unrecognizable. That threat, or promise, whichever you choose to call it, was also thrown into the discard. Not a single attempt was made to reduce the rates, and no member of the party has introduced a tariff bill that would serve to inform the people of this country as to what rates the Democrats believed should be applied to imports of industrial and agricultural products. Instead the bally-hoo artists employed by Mr. Raskob and Mr. Shouse declared the tariff wholly responsible for the depression, in spite of the fact that the export trade of the United States had fallen off in exactly the same proportion as that of the other nations of the world.

DEPRECIATED CURRENCY

Due to the fact that 25 nations have either gone off the gold standard or depreciated their currency by reducing their silver coins to 500 fine, the Treasury will lose fully $125,000,000 in customs revenue this year. For example, the landed cost of an article valued at a pound sterling and carrying an ad valorem duty of 50 per cent under the gold standard would have been $4.86, the value of the pound plus $2.43, the tariff duty of 50 per cent which would amount to $7.29. With Great Britain off the gold standard, the pound is now $3.68, the duty $1.84, or a total of $5.52, a $1.77 loss in landed cost, which is, of course, an added handicap to the American producer of a similar article. The loss of tariff revenue to the Treasury is 59 cents, or 24 per cent. The same percentage of loss occurs when any foreign goods are imported from a country that has gone off the gold standard.

RISE IN COMMODITY PRICES?

The economic theory is that when a nation debases its currency that of a necessity commodity prices must rise. However, this is not a hard and fast rule, as the following statement will illustrate. It is from the American Tariff League Bulletin of May, 1932:

DEPRECIATED EXCHANGE AND IMPORTS INTO THE UNITED STATES

The purpose of this article is to bring up to date as far as possible the material presented in the March issue of the Monthly Bulletin relating to the imports of selected commodities from several of the more important countries that have abandoned the gold standard. In the March Bulletin we presented statistics of imports from eight countries covering the first three or four months after the abandonment of the gold standard. This brought the record through either December, 1931, or January, 1932. In this issue we have the figures of imports from these same eight countries for the first quarter of the current year. This record also shows the percentage change in the volume and unit value of imports over the corresponding quarter of 1931. To facilitate comparison with the earlier study we have retained the same list of commodities used there. We have also added an analysis of imports from Japan for the first quarter of 1932. Japan abandoned the gold standard in December, 1931, and therefore was not included in the earlier study.

One other interesting point that appears in these summaries is the behavior of the wholesale prices in several of the countries on a depreciated basis. In several instances while there was a rise in the internal price level immediately following the abandonment of gold, this tendency seems to have been at least temporarily arrested. All commodity price indexes quoted below are taken from the April 25 issue of Commerce Reports and have been converted by them to a 1926 base.

Imports from Sweden for the first quarter of 1932 were approximately 10 per cent greater than for the first quarter of 1931. The krona was quoted at a discount of approximately 26 per cent for the month of March. Wholesale prices hovered between 73 and 74 per cent during the quarter against a low of 71.8 in September. Eight items show increases in volume of imports as against three decreases. Unit values declined in all cases.

You will observe from the above records that unit prices have fallen from 2 to 86 per cent. Under these circumstances it is of material advantage to the countries who are off the gold standard to ship their merchandise to the United States. The result is disastrous to American producers and American labor is the victim.

DEMOCRATIC PROMISES

In spite of the ardent declarations for protective tariff made by the Democratic Party in 1928, they are still violently opposed to the policy of a protective tariff, which is primarily for the purpose of keeping the home market for American producers and their employees. The Democratic newspapers and those who speak from the platform never lose an opportunity to slam the tariff. But when a tariff bill is being written, then every Democrat interested in the success of his business takes the first train for Washington and asks his Congressman to see that proper rates of protection for his manufactures is placed in the tariff bill. Then after the bill becomes a law, the fireworks begin. From that moment the tariff is blamed for everything that happens in this country. That we have suffered from severe depression nobody can deny, but to say that it is because of our having a tariff law is as foolish and wide of the mark as if the Democrats laid the blame at the door of the League of Nations. To be sure, our exports have fallen off, not so much in volume as in dollar value, but they have fallen off to exactly the same degree in the other nations of the world. Democrats say that we placed a tariff wall so high that Europe could not send us her goods. The fact is that there are too many European goods on the American store counters and shelves right now. Glassware and pottery are coming from Europe in spite of the tariff rates which the Democrats say are too high. Cotton and woolen textiles, gloves of leather and cotton, silks and satins, brushes of every type, cutlery, typewriter supplies, handkerchiefs, chemical glassware and chemicals, coated paper and paperboard, steel pens and mechanical pencils, and a host of industrial products too numerous to list here are all being offered for sale in sufficient quantities and at a price that kills the demand for American-made goods.

Hotels and private homes serve food on dishes made in Japan, England, Germany, and Bavaria, while the potteries of New Jersey, New York, Ohio, and West Virginia are running part time.

Instead of being too high the tariff is too low, because wage reductions in European countries have materially reduced production costs which enable them to undersell the American producer even after they pay the tariff. Repeat the tariff, say the Democrats. Amen, answer the international bankers, and we are for the cancellation of the war debts as well. I am with you, shouts the importer; I have no pay rolls here; I send American money to Europe; I have very few employees and I have no factory and machinery to be taxed, and I make my money by selling foreign goods to Americans, and the price tag is as high as we can make it and hold the trade. There you are, American citizens. How do you like this procedure of the Democratic Party, indorsed by importers and the international bankers, who have loaned European countries more money than would pay our war debt to-day? Why not be loyal to labor in this country? Why not try and buy all the necessities and luxuries we can that are made in the United States? To keep American labor employed you must purchase the commodities that they produce. Perhaps you did not think of it when you bought your oriental rug and your English china. Think it over.

ANOTHER ANGLE OF THE TARIFF ARGUMENT

When you stop and think over the fact that the international bankers have loaned to European nations the vast sum of $15,000,000,000, you will realize why they are constantly advocating the reduction of tariff rates and urging Congress to cancel the war debts. Their argument is that these foreign debtors can pay only in goods. They want the American people to open the gates for the entrance of a flood of merchandise that would paralyze American industry and tear down the American wage earners' standard of living. Where is the money to come from to repay Liberty loan bonds? They evidently intend that the American people shall also carry that burden. I am not in favor of canceling the war debts; nor am I in favor of revising the tariff downward. The record shows that we can consume 90 per cent of all that we produce in this country, and it is of vital importance that we protect our home markets and not worry quite so much about distribution of the remaining 10 per cent.

We want tariff enough to keep the world abroad from adding to our present overproduction surplus. We need American factories at full speed again. It is pure unadulterated buncombe to talk about foreigners not buying our goods because we have a protective tariff. Foreigners do not buy American goods because they love us but because they need the goods, and they will keep on buying them for the same reason.

WITHOUT RHYME OR REASON

Never in the history of the country has there been so intensive a drive against the policy of protective tariff. Without rhyme or reason, it is paraded by the economists as the horrible example of our governmental system, and the college professors still preach the doctrine of free trade to the student bodies in our great universities. All the nations of the world have raised their tariff walls since the World War, and their system permits them to make changes at very short notice; yet every time they make a change in rates it is heralded by the press as another evidence of retaliation against the Hawley-Smoot bill.

The free-trade eternal triangle, composed of the Democratic Party, the importers, and the international bankers, is planning through extensive propaganda to make a drive for the cancellation of the war debts and either revision downward or repeal of the present tariff.

In the Democratic platform of 1928 their demand was for—

Duties that will permit effective competition, insure against monopoly, and at the same time produce a fair revenue for the support of Government. The actual difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, with adequate safeguard for the wage of the American laborer, must be the extreme measure of every tariff rate.

This was their attitude in 1928; but from the moment the hearings commenced until the final passage of the bill they repudiated their promises and lost no opportunity to bludgeon the policy of protective tariff. Whether or not their ardent protestations in behalf of tariff legislation during the campaign of 1928 were solely for political advantage I shall leave to you for decision.

Leading Democratic Members of the House and Senate attacked the policy of protective tariff, making grave charges against what they termed "protected and special interests," and in the next breath they demanded duties on long-staple cotton, salt cake, oil, rice, hides, lumber, and, in fact, all products of the farm, mine, and mill produced in their individual States. Never has there been so sickening an exhibition of inconsistency by Democratic near statesmen as during the period when the Hawley-Smoot bill was under consideration.

In spite of the tirade against the bill and the loose talk about unconscionable rates, the fact is that considering the reductions in rates made by the Tariff Commission since the bill became law, the present average rates are lower than they have been for many years.

The statement that the present tariff is unconscionably high is without foundation or fact. The public is fed up on declarations of this character, which are issued purely as political propaganda. Two-thirds of our imports from foreign countries are admitted free of duty. One-third are on the dutiable list. In the writing of the Hawley-Smoot bill only one-third of the rates on dutiable commodities were changed, and they were not all raised by any means.

In the Republican national platform of 1908 you will find the following:

In all tariff legislation the true principle of protection is best maintained by the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries.

This last sentence in the statement is the meat in the coconut, and just so long as we base the allocation of rates or their change by the Tariff Commission on a basis of the difference in production costs here and abroad, with no consideration of the "reasonable profit to American industries," then we are departing from our fundamental policy of a protective tariff and subscribing to the doctrine of a competitive tariff.

The newspaper and magazine criticism of the tariff consists largely of the blanket charge that it has been the chief cause of the depression. They offer no substantiating evidence, but merely point to the decrease in imports and exports. Our exports and imports have fallen in almost exact ratio with those of the other nations of the world, due to their lack of purchasing power as well as our own.

If the Hawley-Smoot tariff law had not been on the statute books, this country would have been flooded with cheaply produced merchandise from every quarter of the globe; and bad as our present condition is, it would have been so much worse under free trade that we should have seen our industrial and agricultural workers brought to the level of the foreign group who barely exist.

During the first full year's operation of the present tariff law the imports of finished manufactures accounted for 25 per cent of the total imports into this country. During the preceding year the figures were 23 per cent. So that the percentage of imports into this country accounted for by finished manufactures actually increased in spite of all the predictions made by the opposition that the new tariff act would result in a virtual embargo on immense quantities of manufactured imports.

The error made by the opponents of tariff policy is that they have failed to realize that a drop in foreign trade when expressed in dollar value may result fully as much from a decline in the unit value of commodities as from a shrinkage in the volume imported. For example: Our raw-silk importations went down 36 per cent in value as compared with the preceding year, but the volume of imports was greater by 5 per cent. Coffee importations went down 24.8 per cent by value but were 10 per cent greater by volume in pounds. Standard newsprint paper went down 13 per cent in value but only 10 per cent in volume. Sugar went down 29 per cent in value but only 9.7 per cent in pounds. Crude rubber shows a drop of 51 per cent in value but only 9 per cent in volume, so that the quotation by decreasing dollar values of imports is not fairly stating the exact situation. Yet this type of misleading propaganda is being scattered broadcast all over the country by the importers and the Democrats.

In the discussions as to the causes of this period of depression which has seriously affected agricultural and industrial prosperity the critics have all laid great stress upon the evil effects of the present tariff law known as the Hawley-Smoot bill. Democratic orators have made the welkin ring with their vociferous denunciations of this tariff law and without offering the slightest evidence point to it as the primary cause of the business depression.

The fact that our exports have decreased very considerably is not conclusive evidence that retaliatory tariffs by foreign countries have shut out our merchandise. The whole world is involved in this depression, and the purchasing power of foreign nations has shrunk in the same ratio as it has in this country.

We have had five periods of depression and unemployment during the last 50 years, and this is the first really severe one that has occurred during a Republican administration. During our past periods of depression, however, the rest of the world was in fairly good shape and our recovery was not long delayed.

As a matter of fact, the actual decline in our foreign trade has not been anything like as great as has been heralded by the opponents of tariff policy. Dr. Julius Klein, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, in a recent statement said:

There is scant evidence of any drastic embargo on American wares in foreign markets. In 19 representative countries all over the world, comprising most of our leading customers, our share in their imports was almost exactly 20 per cent. Our proportion in the trade of the same markets from 1924 to 1927 averaged 20.7 per cent. It certainly would require a considerable amount of deliberate distortion to conjure out of these figures any conclusion as to the alleged devastating "reprisals" against American wares.

FREE IMPORTS ALSO DECLINED

The fact that our imports of duty-free goods have fallen off more than our imports of dutiable goods is proof enough that the tariff is not responsible for any decline. On the other hand, there is abundant evidence that without the protection of high duties domestic business and prices would have declined even more than they have during the past year. The Hawley-Smoot tariff has not made business good but it has kept it far better than it would have been without it.

WHAT OUR PEOPLE OUGHT TO KNOW

The people of the United States ought to know that ad valorem duties are not added to the retail price of goods produced in their own country but that tariff duties are paid at the customhouse on the value of the imported articles, the value being the invoice price to the American importer.

The high price you pay for imported goods is not so much a tariff penalty as it is an importer's profit. Once more I urge you to buy goods made in the United States of America.

I wonder if the folks in the United States realize just how fair we have been in writing the Hawley-Smoot bill. The internationalists have bemoaned our tariff rates, and yet we have provided a method by which they can secure a hearing before the Tariff Commission if they feel that rates are unduly high. Do you know that a national of a foreign country or a corporation may file a protest with their ambassador and that he may present it to the State Department who in turn will send it to the Tariff Commission? No other nation in the world offers us this method of being heard on their tariff rates. We can file no protests and there is no tribunal before which an American manufacturer may be heard. Our law states that the commission shall investigate the differences in cost of production of any domestic article and of any like or similar foreign article, upon application of any interested party. Plainly that language does not confer that privilege upon American citizens alone but gives the competing foreigner the same privilege. Just a word regarding the importance of restrictive immigration which should go hand in hand with the policy of protective tariff.

IMMIGRATION VERSUS TARIFF POLICY

As a new country we believed in encouraging immigration until within the last decade the tide of immigration rose to more than a million a year. Congress then deemed it wise to make our immigration more selective and to reduce the number of immigrants to a total that can be readily assimilated. Organized labor favored this restrictive legislation since the labor market was becoming glutted and American standards of living seriously threatened. Sane labor leaders to-day agree that if this restrictive legislation is beneficial when applied to men it should apply to their handiwork as well, and that we should not cripple our industries and deliberately create unemployment by permitting the importation of vast quantities of commodities produced abroad by these potential immigrants under conditions with which American labor can not compete. Every day's labor we import takes the price of a day's labor from the income of the American wage earner.

THREE TARIFF PROVISIONS

There are three definable tariff positions: A tariff for revenue only, allocating duties so low as to give the foreign manufacturer an appreciable advantage in our markets and increase importations to displace American-made goods. Second, a competitive tariff which lays duties that will exactly equalize the cost of production here and abroad and give the foreign producer an equal chance to supply the needs of our people. Third, a protective tariff that will allocate such duties as will keep the American market for the American producer, permit the payment of decent wages, and maintain the American standard of living.

This is the policy that has been instrumental in making us the greatest of all nations, and if the Hawley-Smoot bill had not been enacted into law we should have seen our markets flooded with foreign merchandise and the existing depression would have been far more disastrous in its results.

Our people are very soon going to awake to the fact that the policy of real protection to American industry has been sidetracked for a makeshift policy of competitive tariff. When they come to a full realization of the evils that may result, we shall hear from them in no uncertain terms, and their message will be a demand to return to the protective policy.

The Republican Party demands a continuance of high living standards for our workers, payment of the war debts, a continuation of restrictive immigration, and the maintenance of the policy of a protective tariff.

MORE PROTECTION NEEDED

Remembering how steadily the Southern States send men to Congress to vote against all protective tariff bills, it is interesting to note in the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer of recent date the most earnest plea that Congress and the administration come to the rescue of the mining industry in North Carolina with higher duties on imported ores. The Observer declares that—

Competing foreign mills have played havoc with domestic producers and forced them to close their mines.

The copper-mining industry in North Carolina, it declares, is headed for extinction unless Congress does something. Foreign copper can be laid down in this country, the Observer says, for less than the cost of production at American smelters.

But it is not in North Carolina alone, nor in behalf of the mining industry alone, that protests are being heard against the inadequate tariff rates of the Hawley-Smoot law. The manufacturers of paper protest that their industry is menaced by the increasing importations of pulp, wood pulp, and paper; American sugar manufacturers are complaining that importations of foreign refined sugar threaten their industry; manufacturers of steel protest against dumping of foreign steel products on the American market, pointing to the fact that there was a 50 per cent increase in iron and steel imports in March as compared with February, and calling attention to official reports which show that in 1931 more than 45,000 tons of flat rolled steel and 369,943 tons of all classes of steel were imported, and that due to this importation 237,130 men lost work in the United States.

And so the protests come rolling in with increasing volume, not only from producers of raw materials but from manufacturers of a score of products, who declare that the duties carried in the Hawley-Smoot tariff law are wholly inadequate to preserve them from devastating foreign competition.

One reason for the present inadequacy of these rates is the fact that so many of our trade competitors have gone off the gold standard and are consequently able now to buy materials and obtain labor with cheap money. In Finland, for example, manufacturers of pulp from which paper is made can buy for $1 that which would have cost them $1.40 under the gold standard. And so it goes all over Europe. As a result of depreciated currency in these countries our tariff rates virtually have been reduced from 30 to 40 per cent. In almost innumerable lines of manufacture they are no longer protective at all, to say nothing of being extortionately high, as Democratic leaders have persistently charged. If this condition continues much longer American manufacturers in many lines will be forced into bankruptcy, for it is not possible for them to compete with cheap foreign labor costs and at the same time face the deflated currency differential in favor of imported goods of 30 to 40 per cent.

There never was any justification for criticism of the Hawley-Smoot bill on the score that it afforded too much protection. With world conditions as they are now, with depreciating currencies in 25 countries, and with vast accumulations of manufacturing goods as well as raw materials all over the world seeking an outlet at any price, it is too plain for demonstration that the rates in the law are too low rather than too high.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9699) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, insist on the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. What is in disagreement at the present time?

Mr. BYRNS. I really do not know. I understand that possibly the rural sanitation proposition is in disagreement. I do not know of anything except that, and I hope the House will permit the conferees to get together.

Mr. SNELL. And we will have to wait and see what the conferees will do, because we ought to pass the bill to-night.

Mr. BYRNS. We ought to; yes.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Will this now open up other matters?

Mr. BYRNS. It opens up every amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Other than amendment No. 9.

Mr. BYRNS. Except the one that we adopted, amendment No. 9, as the gentleman from Wisconsin suggests.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Under a reservation of objection, and, of course, I shall not object, because this is the last day of the fiscal year and I understand the situation, may I appeal to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and the conferees of the House to protect the House and the United States Treasury, and also to stand for proper and clean administration of the merchant marine act, and to insist upon the amendment which would prohibit the payment of any money to the Seatrain Co. Let me point out to the gentleman that not one cent has yet been paid, no mail has been carried by this ship and the ship has only recently been changed from British registry to American registry. It was a British ship and the money was lent by British capital to build the ship. I spoke to the Comptroller General to-day, and he is still of the same opinion as he was when he wrote the Postmaster General that on the facts he now has he would not approve any vouchers under the contract. The defense made by the gentleman from Indiana, it seems to me, speaks for itself. The only statement he could make was that we would have litigation, and we certainly will have litigation, civil and perhaps penal, unless we stop payments under this contract.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BYRNS, ARNOLD, LUDLOW, WOOD of Indiana, and THATCHER.

GRAND CENTRAL STATION POST OFFICE AND OFFICE BUILDING

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12360) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into a contract to purchase the parcel of land and the building known as the Grand Central Station Post Office and Office Building, No. 452 Lexington Avenue, in the city, county, and State of New York, for post office and other governmental purposes, and to pay the purchase price therefor on or prior to June 30, 1937, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 23, strike out "$15,500,000" and insert "$14,500,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when this bill was under consideration, virtually by unanimous consent, last Saturday, after reading not only the report but the hearings, I was inclined to reduce the amount that is authorized for the purchase of the Grand Central Post Office Station from $15,500,000 to $12,500,000. The statement, however, was made on the floor, and I am taking the floor now for the purpose of repeating the statement, that this was simply the maximum amount and that it was not intended that it should be used as a criterion for the Post Office Department to pay such maximum amount. The Senate has now cut down the appraised value of the land and the building from $15,500,000 to $14,500,000, and I want the RECORD to show that by adopting this amendment we do not place ourselves in the position of indicating that this is the amount we intend the Postmaster General shall pay for this property, but that we wish him to make the very best agreement possible. Because, in my opinion, the property should be bought for many millions less than $14,500,000.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. That is true. This is simply a maximum amount authorized in the bill, specifically providing that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to enter into negotiations for the purchase of the building, and the Post Office Department officials and the Treasury Department officials both believe that they will be able to purchase the building for much less than the amount fixed by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 12443) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1932, and June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. I also ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I reserve all objections until after the statement is read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"General and Special Claims Commissions, United States and Mexico: The unexpended balance of the appropriation for the General and Special Claims Commissions, United States and Mexico, for the fiscal year 1932 shall remain available for the same purposes until June 30, 1933."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
WILL R. WOOD.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a deficiency bill, and there is nothing imperative that it must be passed during the present fiscal year.

Mr. BYRNS. Let me say to the gentleman that it carries an appropriation for veterans, which is very important.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows that there is one item there that is in very sharp disagreement with some of the Members. That is the reappropriation for the Mexican Claims Commission. There is not a thing in the world they can do until December. They have not done anything for a year.

We have paid $2,000,000 out for salaries, and they have settled only about 16 or 17 cases. I submit that in this day, when we are reducing salaries, eliminating officers, that this crowd employed under this provision ought to be made to go out and earn an honest day's work. They have not done an honest day's work for the last two or three years.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman that there is a very sharp disagreement between the gentleman and the State Department. Our Government renewed the convention or treaty with Mexico on June 18. The State Department says that under these circumstances it wants to go to work and clean up the claims which the people are entitled to have disposed of.

The convention agreement expired last fall, if I remember correctly, and had not been renewed, and they could not do anything in the meantime. Now they have renewed it and they want to go to work. This is a reappropriation of what Congress has heretofore appropriated. It is not a new appropriation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The extension agreement has not been ratified by the Senate, neither has it been ratified by the Mexican Congress. The Mexican Congress will not be in session until we go there. That is not the reason they have not renewed it.

On yesterday I called attention to this situation, thinking it might be in the State Department appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNS. I suspect the gentleman from New York has been talking with the same man that has talked to me.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not know to whom the gentleman refers, but if he refers to the American commissioner, he would not touch a cent of the salary.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know who has been talking to the gentleman, but I know who has been talking to me on the subject. Here is the situation. There are over 6,000 of these claims.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Since 1863.

Mr. BYRNS. That are pending before this commission. Last fall the convention agreement or treaty expired, and the Comptroller General held that the money which Congress had appropriated could no longer be used for the purpose of investigating these claims. That convention agreement has been put into effect and was renewed on June 18. The State Department says that with these claims pressing, in which people are interested, widows and other people, what it wants to do is to take the money already appropriated—no new appropriation—and proceed to gather the evidence and have it ready and dispose of them promptly. Congress approved this appropriation a year ago. It made an appropriation for that specific purpose. You have your convention agreement now, which enables the Comptroller to ratify the expenditures, and why we should not proceed, I can not understand.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows that any treaty that is extended must be ratified, that the extension agreement has not been ratified, that the Mexican Government can not ratify it because their Congress is not in session, and that the Senate of the United States has not ratified it. There are 6,000 claims pending, it is true, and if they proceed at the rate they are going, it will take them 10,000 years to finish the 6,000 cases. The gentleman knows that in the last deficiency appropriation bill we had an appropriation to close up the commission.

Mr. TABER. And is it not a fact that we appropriated $50,000 in the deficiency appropriation bill last winter to go ahead and complete the indexing and filing of these claims and wind it all up?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is my understanding.

Mr. BYRNS. That was upon the theory that the convention had not been signed. We did not know that it was going to be signed, and all that material was down there, and the Secretary of State and his assistant felt it would be a loss to this Government, because it was needed for future reference in inquiries made about these claims; and, therefore, some money should be appropriated, as he thought and we believed, for the purpose of collecting that material and preserving it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much will be used out of this unexpended balance if this authorization is revived?

Mr. BYRNS. There is about $200,000 in the appropriation. I do not know whether it will all be used or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe that they have had an appropriation of about $360,000 a year.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. A year ago I took occasion to criticize the extravagant waste of this appropriation, so far as the work that was really accomplished when the regular appropriation of $360,000 was under consideration.

I called attention to the fact that that appropriation had been carried for years, and yet no settlement had been made, and that it was costing the Government more in maintaining this wasteful and extravagant commission than any other commission in the history of the Government.

Mr. TABER. It has been going on for at least 10 years, and they have decided very few cases.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Under the circumstances, if unanimous consent is granted, will the gentleman agree to let this matter go to the House for its judgment?

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, it is in the conference report. I can not make that agreement with the gentleman. If the House wants to reject it, then it can reject the whole report.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. All right. Can we have 20 minutes on a side upon it?

Mr. BYRNS. I will be very glad to yield 20 minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not want the 20 minutes, but there are members on the gentleman's committee who know more about it than I do.

Mr. BYRNS. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman. I hope we can dispose of it shortly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With the understanding that we will have debate and go to the bat on the proposition, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, this bill as it passed the House carried $15,404,250.79. As it passed the Senate it carried $22,878,769.61, an increase of $7,474,518.62. As it has been agreed upon in conference the bill carries $22,682,369.61.

I wish to say to the House that the principal increase in this bill consists of $5,000,000, which was placed on by the Senate for Boulder Dam, and some judgments amounting to $3,000,000.

That is all I care to say. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield five minutes to me?

Mr. BYRNS. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, amendment 36 provides for the reappropriation of the items appropriated for the fiscal year 1932 for the General and Special Claims Commission, United States and Mexico.

This commission has done no work for practically a year. It never did do any efficient work. They have had several claims presented to them, but they have not disposed of 5 per cent of the number of claims that have been presented to them. It is simply a waste of money.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. When the gentleman says that the commission has not disposed of more than 5 per cent, does not the gentleman mean that they have not determined more than 5 per cent?

Mr. TABER. That is just so. They have not considered more than 5 per cent; they have not even held hearings on more than 5 per cent, almost a negligible number. On the fingers of two hands I could almost count all the cases they have considered in the 10 years of their existence. It is an item that the Congress ought to be ashamed to put into an appropriation bill. [Applause.] We ought to cut it out and we ought to cut it out right now. The only way to cut it out is by voting down the conference report. I do not think we will have any trouble in getting an agreement if we cut out this item. We can instruct the conferees to go back and recede with an amendment cutting out this appropriation. There is absolutely no excuse in the world for spending this money and keeping this commission on the pay roll. Last winter when the deficiency bill was being considered there was an item brought over from the Senate, brought back by our conferees, calling for $50,000 to close up the files of this commission, which died practically a year ago and which has not done anything since, because those files, as I understand, are over in the State Department, locked up. It seems absolutely ridiculous for us to spend this money.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it not a fact that the reason the work was stopped at that time was because the agreement with Mexico had expired and we did not have a new agreement?

Mr. TABER. Oh, that was one reason.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And that was the main reason.

Mr. TABER. But they never did anything in the line of real work in getting the job done.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I may say to the gentleman I know something personally about the work of the commission, and I think this indictment, with all deference, is quite unfair. Does the gentleman take the position that citizens of the United States, having claims in Mexico for the outrageous losses which they have sustained there, shall be deprived from now on of any opportunity to have those claims presented?

Mr. TABER. I would not be in favor of that if we had an efficient commission that would go on and do the business; but as long as we are going to have a commission that will not do 5 per cent of its job in 10 years I think we ought to stop and stop right now.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Instead of stopping the appropriation, then, let us do something looking toward getting a different organization, but certainly we should not deny to the citizens of the United States a chance to get a settlement of their claims in Mexico.

Mr. TABER. Let us stop appropriating money and wait until the convention is signed and we have an efficient commission that will clean up the job presented, and let us consider it then.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. In direct reply to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] said, with the exception of the claim of the Illinois Central, which was the largest claim, and 16 minor claims, none of the American claims has been considered, and I make the charge that they have purposely not been considered, by reason of the personnel, not of the American commission, and I make that charge without any reservation whatever, and I invite an investigation of the whole dirty mess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know whether anybody in favor of this report desires any time or not.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Now, the gentleman has heard the charges against the inefficiency or the lack of accomplishment by this commission. What has the gentleman to say as to whether or not this is an efficient commission?

Mr. BYRNS. I will just say, in the first place, that such a charge carries one against the entire State Department administration which is in charge of this matter, including the Secretary of State and his assistants. I can not subscribe to what the gentleman has said with reference to it. They inform me that they are proceeding with all dispatch and that if it had not been for the interruption which occurred last October these claims would be far on the way to final determination now. The gentleman appreciates, I am sure, the difficulties and delays incident to dealing with the Mexican Government during the past several years.

Mr. MICHENER. Previous to October what was the record of the commission as to efficiency and accomplishment?

Mr. BYRNS. My information is from those in charge that the investigation was conducted efficiently and that every effort was made to determine these claims and finally settle them.

I want to say this to the gentleman, that the man who is in charge of these claims, a resident of the District of Columbia, is one of the most competent and one of the most efficient who could have been selected. His reputation is that of a gentleman of the highest character and a gentleman of the highest standing, and he was appointed by the Secretary of State to do this work.

Mr. MICHENER. What is the gentleman's name?

Mr. BYRNS. Colonel Bouvé. There is no man of higher character than Colonel Bouvé.

Mr. MICHENER. The charges that have been made here are very serious.

Mr. BYRNS. I want to say to the gentleman that a gentleman formerly connected with this commission called on me. I asked him if he had not been formerly connected with the commission. He admitted he had, but he went on to say that had nothing whatsoever to do with his criticism of the work. Yet I am told, and I make this statement on information only, he was an applicant for reappointment to the place he lost.

Here is the proposition, I may say to the gentleman: There are 6,000 claims of Americans involved. These involve about $500,000,000. A gentleman told me a while ago that a poor old widow in his district had a claim. There are other widows who have claims.

Now, if you are going to vote down this report, I take it you will by that act indicate that these claims of American citizens are not going to be considered. I do not think we can afford to put ourselves in such a position.

I want to say to my friend, the gentleman from Michigan, if he has not confidence in the Secretary of State and in the State Department to see that this work is properly done, I have. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. So far as the gentleman from Michigan is concerned, I know nothing about the matter. I am asking the gentleman, who should know something about the matter.

Does the Secretary of State ask for this appropriation?

Mr. BYRNS. Why, certainly, the State Department has asked for it. I do not think the Secretary of State individually asked it, but his department asked it.

Mr. MICHENER. There is a vast difference between the State Department and the Secretary of State.

Mr. BYRNS. The Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Carr, has asked it.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; that is true. Very often the employees in a department go on forever, and the head of the department oftentimes does not know all the details of a matter.

Now, if the Secretary of State has made a statement in reference to this matter, or has personal knowledge, I should like to know it. If it is just a departmental matter that has reached the gentleman from Tennessee, about which the Secretary has no personal knowledge, then I think it is hardly fair—

Mr. BYRNS. I may say this, I have never talked to the Secretary of State personally about the matter, but I have talked with Assistant Secretary Carr, whom every man on this floor knows.

I say, and say unhesitatingly, that I do not believe there is a higher-minded, more patriotic, more loyal, and more efficient officer of the Government than Assistant Secretary Carr, of the State Department. [Applause.] I am willing to trust him, because he is in direct supervision of this matter, to see to it that this appropriation is properly expended.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There are some facts connected with the work of this commission which are unfortunate and perhaps should not be very greatly discussed here. The truth is that the first organization proved unfortunate; and after some cases had been heard in Mexico City by the first commission that was established, we found it was to the interest of the people of the United States not to proceed with the organization as it then existed. A change was subsequently made in the personnel of the commission, and after considerable delay and disturbance it became possible to take up the work of the commission, and my information is that since that time, and until the commission expired, the commission was going forward and doing capable and successful work.

Mr. BYRNS. That is true. I do not think it is fair to hold the commission responsible for the delays which have been referred to when, as we all know, there have been frequent changes in the Government of Mexico. It seems to me some consideration should be given to that fact.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. KLEBERG. I will ask the distinguished chairman of our Appropriations Committee whether or not he has reason to believe that the Secretary of State knew his department requested this appropriation? I ask that question in answer to the interrogation of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], when he asked the distinguished chairman as to whether or not the Secretary of State asked for this appropriation. Would it not be naturally assumed that if the Department of State were to come to the chairman of our Appropriations Committee with a request that the money be reappropriated that he not only sanctioned the request of his department but he added his own request to it? I ask the chairman that question because I am new in this procedure.

Mr. BYRNS. Undoubtedly we must assume that. This matter was presented to the Budget, the Budget has recommended it, and the President has sent it here as a part of his estimates. He has asked the Congress to make this reappropriation of the unexpended balance, and I hold a copy of that Budget in my hand.

Mr. KLEBERG. I will ask the gentleman if the committee in reaching its decision to reappropriate this fund did not take into consideration the very evident difficulty under which the commission labored in the investigation of these claims in Mexico, and would it not be reasonable to assume that obstacles would be placed in the path of those who were attempting to unearth evidence that would tend to show the liability of Mexico to our Government in the payment of damages to certain of our citizens? Would it not be natural to assume that Mexico would place every possible obstacle in the path of those who were investigating in behalf of the United States and our citizens?

In my district there are a number of claims. It so happens that in the southern end of the State, and outside of my district, in the district that our Speaker represents, every bit of land comes down from the Crown of Spain, through Mexico, and its titles then through the Republic of Texas up to date. The early history of this section after Texas joined the Union up until as late as 1916 and 1917 is marked by sporadic raids by Mexican outlaws and bandits from Mexico. You will find that the depredations of certain bandits, such as Katarino Garza and Cortina, deprived cattlemen of the south and southwestern portion of Texas not of small numbers of cattle but of entire herds. I here refer to the claims of several ranchmen who have small holdings, who have no means, who have lost considerable property and money which was stolen and taken to Mexico. They, as American citizens, are involved in these claims, as well as larger ranchers. The principle involved is whether or not we should consider it too burdensome an expense to reappropriate these funds for the express purpose of protecting the property of American citizens on American soil or, more properly, to the end that they recover at least in part the value of their property.

Mr. BYRNS. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. I just want to supplement what my distinguished colleague has said by stating that I know personally of a number of legitimate claims for real and substantial damage along the lines suggested by my colleague.

I do not know about the merits of this particular controversy; but if this small appropriation will hasten the settlement of these claims for actual losses, I think it should be made because there are a number of such cases. Some of them are by people in my section, but more of them are from people in other sections of the State. Some of these people have been ruined by these losses, at least they are entitled to a day in court, and their claims should be paid if some arrangement can be made for their payment.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE].

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a word. For a number of years Colonel Bouvé has appeared before the committee of which I had the honor of being chairman for a number of years and which is now presided over so ably by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER]. This gentleman has appeared before our committee in the interest of this very subject, and I may say to the House that I have never had a man before the committee that I trusted more implicitly, and I believe him to be honest and am satisfied he is doing everything that can be done, but I may say to you that it is a very different problem to do business south of the line from doing business north of the line. You have got to get the people down there in the right frame of mind and then you have to make your arrangements and finally some day you will come together and have an agreement.

I remember a year ago when I was at El Paso, I was over on the other side and I met the distinguished president of that Province. He told me then, "Mr. SHREVE, we are anxious to have these claims settled just as speedily as possible, but you know we are having considerable difficulty on our side in coming to agreements, but I want to say to you that the work is going to be done."

We should not lose the services of the very man who is now doing this work. I understand the situation the gentleman from Texas has described, and I agree with him fully because our observation and study of the situation proves just what the gentleman has said. There are many small claims and they are going to be adjusted just as quickly as possible, but it would be wrong for us now to tear down this organization and lose the evidence that has been gathered or have it down in the State Department and then after a while put on some new men as commissioners, when I can say that the man now in charge is doing all that it is possible for any one man to do.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGUARDIA].

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, there are gentlemen on the Committee on Appropriations who have the facts. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has given this matter a great deal of consideration and has made an impressive statement to the House.

This commission has been in existence since 1923, nine years, and in the nine years only 150 cases out of over 6,000 claims have been settled. Of the claims settled only one was a large or important case.

Let the Record show right now that if this money is authorized that I have warned the House there will not be one single, solitary case determined between now and the time when we come back in December. It is simply a wilful waste of about $200,000 of public funds. The matter should be left in abeyance until December.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is my understanding the question is not whether we want these claims settled or not. Everybody wants the claims settled. The representatives of the other governments concerned, however, have failed to cooperate and function with the American commission, and if we appropriate this money now there is no commission that has authority to hear these claims or to settle them, and it means simply the employment of the American commission waiting for Mexico to act some time in the future. Is not this the situation?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Absolutely nothing will be done this year. That is why I urge withholding the appropriation until then. There are two sets of claims, one arising out of the revolution of 1868, which are mixed claims of nationals of one country against the other country, and the other arising out of the disturbance from 1910 to 1920 in Mexico, most of the claimants being American nationals. There has been little or no consideration given to this latter class of claims.

The gentleman from Tennessee is correct when he says there are 6,000 claims pending, and in nine years 150 have been settled. Now, figure out how long it is going to take at that rate to settle all of them.

Mr. SIMMONS. And if this money is appropriated, there will still be 6,000 claims pending next December?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Certainly. All that will be done is pay salaries out of this money. Gentlemen, this is not the first time I have, in my humble and feeble way, sought to bring matters of this kind to the attention of the House. If you do appropriate this money, I warn the House not a single, solitary claim will be settled between now and January 1. I can not repeat this too many times. Go ahead and throw away $250,000 if you care to do so.

Mr. BYRNS. Does not my friend understand that this money is proposed to be devoted to getting the evidence and preparing these claims and that this is work that has to be done before the claims can be settled and failure to make this appropriation would mean a delay of six months?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. BYRNS, they have been doing that for nine years. We had 60 people down in Mexico one whole winter preparing claims and not a single claim heard. There is quite a story to that which some day will come out.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. KLEBERG. I dislike to interrupt my colleague; but I would like to ask him the question whether he has ever tried to get a Mexican to admit something that was detrimental either to him or to Mexico.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. That is why we have a mixed claim. That is just my complaint. We have appropriated and spent for this commission in nine years over $2,000,000, and have gotten no results. Does the gentleman know anything about that?

Mr. KLEBERG. No; but I may say—

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Let us investigate the condition of the commission. I invite an investigation of it. There will be some startling international revelations and some shocking domestic facts disclosed. I urge an investigation of the activities of the commission, its activities, its personnel, yes, its pay roll, and all about it. Let us investigate what United States citizens got for the $2,000,000 spent to date—and then appropriate more, if necessary, in December.

Mr. KLEBERG. I am not worried about the investigation of the commission. What I am worried about is the continuation of the commission, so that the decision on these claims can go forward.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. They can not function between now and December. The convention has not been ratified by either the United States or Mexico.

All I can do in this matter is to call the attention of the House to the facts. This has been going on for nine years. There have been two treaties, and the last one expired nearly a year ago. The new treaty has not been renewed, only an extension agreement. I will submit a proposition to the gentleman from Tennessee. Let us make the money contingent upon the ratification of the extension by both countries.

That will be fair. It must eventually be ratified. The commission can not function until then. The new agreement with Mexico must be ratified by the Senate. "Oh, no," is the answer, "that would take off the pay roll the 60 pets who went to Mexico last fall and stayed there all winter and did not take up a case." I am not on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, neither am I on the Appropriations Committee. I am but one of the 435 Members of this House. I can only urge my colleagues to stop this unnecessary waste of funds.

May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee how it was that this proposition originated in the Senate?

Mr. BYRNS. For the reason that when the bill passed the House there was no information that there had been a convention treaty signed. As a matter of fact, we knew it was in conference, but they had not secured such an agreement. As I stated a moment ago, the convention was not signed by both countries until June 18. It would not have been included in the Senate if it had not been signed.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman from Tennessee does not contend that the signing of the convention is a renewal of the treaty. That is where the rub comes in. It takes two to make a contract, and it takes two to make a treaty; both sides will have to ratify it.

Mr. BYRNS. Both countries have signed it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Why does not the Senate ratify it? The gentleman does not claim that the Senate has ratified it.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The suggestion has been made that the money should not be available until the Mexican Government ratifies the treaty. I think that would be unwise. We are always expected to act first, and if we are going to wait until they act they might not act at all. In fact, I think there would be more force in having us act first. We are asking something from the Mexican Government. We are trying to obtain a settlement for claimants—citizens of the United States.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. This is a mixed-claims commission; there are claims against the United States.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; but we know that our interest in the matter is in getting settlements for our people against Mexico.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Let me read a statement by a gentleman on the floor yesterday. Yesterday I pointed out the lack of activity of this commission, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER]—and there is no harder worker, no more conscientious worker on the Appropriations Committee than that gentleman—said:

I may say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE], who was previous chairman of this subcommittee, and a most worthy chairman, very carefully considered that matter, and the committee felt that there should be no further appropriation carried at present. I concluded some time ago that they were spending too much money for the results obtained.

That is what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] said yesterday.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The tribute paid to the American member of the commission by Mr. SHREVE I agreed to, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania will recall that we have often complained of the delay incident to the disposition of cases as well as the manner in which some cases were disposed of. This was due, however, largely to the failure by the other country to cooperate and to the further fact that the commission was slow in organizing. Attention was called to the large amount of money being spent in the preparation of cases, and under the guidance of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE] we corrected some of the abuses.

There is substantial ground for complaint, such as the gentleman from New York [Mr. LA GUARDIA] has made, and I trust the State Department will not permit any further expenditures to be made until assured that the commission is prepared to dispose of cases with reasonable dispatch.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Does not the gentleman believe that this reappropriation could well lie over until December?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I would say it might be a mistake at this late day to take such action, since the adoption of a conference report is involved.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I was guided by the gentleman's judgment yesterday on the subject.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I hope that the State Department will not permit any of this money to be expended until the matters to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. LA GUARDIA] has called attention have been carefully examined and assurance given that the business before the commission will be efficiently disposed of, free from the criticism which in a large measure is amply justified by reports submitted to our committee.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I submit here a brief but concise memorandum giving a sketchy history of the commission and a résumé of the facts I have referred to:

MEMORANDUM—THE MEXICAN-AMERICAN ARBITRATION

Two arbitration conventions were concluded between Mexico and the United States in 1923. The general scope of the arbitration covered by these treaties was to cover all claims or controversies between the two countries since 1888, the date of the last general arbitration between them. The arbitration treaties were the bases of the restoration of relations between the two Governments which had been suspended for a long time and intermittently suspended since the outbreak of the revolution against General Diaz.

Since 1923 the Government of the United States, acting through its legal representatives, has presented but two cases for hearing by the commission created under the so-called "special convention" or treaty which dealt with American claims arising during the so-called revolutionary period, namely, between 1910 and 1920.

During the same period American representatives have presented only about 150 claims before the so-called general commission, which dealt with all other claims, including claims of Mexico against the United States.

On two occasions there were vacancies in the position of presiding commissioner. Instead of a prompt filling of the vacancies, the matter was neglected, so that on each occasion there was approximately a delay of a year.

When the two conventions expired in the past, the United States delayed steps for their renewal so that the Mexican Senate could not act on them in time to have the work proceed without interruption.

Congress has each year made liberal appropriations for the work and been given to understand that it was proceeding, as have American claimants. Up to date Congress has appropriated approximately $2,000,000.

Only the very smallest and least important cases have been presented, with a single exception, in which, however, Mexico did not contest the case on the merits.

Both conventions expired last summer; that is, about a year ago. All three commissioners on the general commission which was sitting in Washington left the city. A few Mexicans with the Mexican agent left Washington for Mexico with their records. The American agency had a force of about 60 people.

Under orders from the Department of State, the American agency records were closed. The commission's records were also closed.

An appropriation was then obtained from Congress during the present session under the first deficiency bill. It was explained that this sum was to be used to close the records and index them. This would, of course, necessitate opening the closed records so that they could be closed again. If they had to be indexed, that work must have been neglected since 1923, in spite of the fact that out of the thousands of cases pending only about 150 had been argued. To do this work (certainly not very difficult work) a large force was retained, with salaries ranging from $12,000 downward.

If the conventions should be renewed in the near future, in spite of the fact that they lapsed a year ago, the renewals, like other renewals in the past, would have to be acted upon by the Mexican Senate. This can not take place until next fall.

If any convention is in any way altered, instead of being simply renewed, for which the Senate of the United States has already given authorization, then the altered convention will, of course, have to be submitted to the Senate.

If the waste of money is not continued at the present time, but stopped on July 1, then an investigation can be made to determine why this great and extremely difficult enterprise has been debauched; why cases have not been tried; why there have been constant, deliberate delays; and, in short, what influences have been at work to bring about this amazing wreck of the work.

The item of page 34 of the second deficiency bill as passed by the Senate does not show that the amount is about $250,000. It refers to an unexpended balance but does not reveal that the reason the money was not expended is that about a year ago the Comptroller General ruled that the fund had lapsed, since the arbitration agreements lapsed, and the work stopped. No work of the arbitration has been done for a year. No case has been argued for more than a year. Since the work can not be resumed for a long time, so far as the presentation of cases is concerned, why should there be an appropriation now?

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I want to make this suggestion. Since the Congress has a great deal of important work to do and should not adjourn for some time if we are going to keep faith with the people and carry out some of the promises made by conventions, I believe the proper solution of this pending matter is to have the Committee on Expenditures make an adequate and careful investigation of this commission, and then, if we find that everything is not as it should be and that changes should be made, we can recommend curative legislation. There is no sense in becoming hysterical. I notice in reading the press reports that the Democratic Party is still claiming to be against the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill. Under the Constitution tariff measures must originate in the House of Representatives. The Democrats have control of the House, and they have a majority of members on the Ways and Means Committee, by which tariff legislation must be considered under the rules of the House. The Democrats have been in control of the House and the Ways and Means Committee for many months, and they have not even reduced the tariff on aluminum pants buttons one-half of 1 per cent. The only tariff rates which these self-styled patriotic Democratic opponents of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill have passed or recommended were to place embargo tariffs on oil, copper, lumber, and coal.

The Democratic platform plank denouncing the tariff rates of the Hawley-Smoot bill is therefore a promise intended to fool the American people and catch votes. The intelligent American voters will not fall for your false tariff promises in view of the record of the Democratic Party, which has had control of the House, in which tariff legislation must originate, during this session of Congress.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, in addition to what I have already said, I might say that I do not know the name of even a single claimant who is involved in this investigation. So far as I know there is certainly no one from my own State. I do not know where any one of them lives; I know nothing about it. I have no interest in this, but I take this position. There are some 6,000 claimants, some of them widows, some of them people who need to be paid, who feel that they have just claims against the Mexican Government, who have appealed to our Government to see that they are given justice. In order to do that it is necessary to investigate, collect the evidence, brief it, and put it in proper shape to be presented to the proper tribunal. That is all this appropriation means.

If we put it off until next January or February, gentlemen can see that these claimants will be denied that much longer getting what they believed to be their just rights. Having a year ago made this appropriation, and having made it for the purpose of having this very work done, the work having been stopped in the fall by reason of the expiration of the convention treaty, and the treaty having been renewed on June 18 last, and as we are only requested to make a reappropriation and not a new appropriation, it seems to me there can be no reason why justice should not be done to these claimants, and this evidence collected so that they can have their just rights determined. These are the claims of American citizens which are being investigated against the Mexican Government. Of course, the Mexican Government is not particularly interested in expediting these claims. I think some consideration should be given this commission on that account.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. I have had some experience in investigating some of these claims. A number of the claimants live in my district. The evidence required to be gathered is of the most technical nature. This is not an American court. As gentlemen know, the court is made up of a representative from our Government, one from the Mexican Government, and the third usually from one of the Latin American Republics. I have heard of several cases that have been presented and lost. They were lost upon the ground that the evidence had not been prepared in a very careful manner and in a technical way. The commission has been extremely technical, and it is therefore necessary to prepare the evidence with great care.

I can say from the investigation of at least one case recently that I believe Colonel Bouvé and associates are trying their best to get the evidence prepared in such a way that it will meet the requirements of the commission, and the delay has been largely in the interest of the American claimants, so that their claims will not be thrown out as soon as considered because of lack of evidence which the commission requires. I hope the report will be approved.

Mr. ALMON. And may I say, Mr. Speaker, that I know of one case whose claim has been pending a long while and he is becoming very much discouraged. I sincerely hope this money will be reappropriated.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, we have a considerable number of claimants in South Dakota. The claims are legitimate and ought to be allowed at the earliest possible moment. I hope the conference report will be approved.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LA GUARDIA) there were ayes 106 and noes 24.

So the conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 23: On page 21, after line 15, insert:

"Industry among Indians: Not more than $50,000 of the appropriation of $475,000 contained in the Interior Department appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, for encouraging industry and self-support among Indians, is hereby made available for the purchase of sheep for the Jicarilla Indians, New Mexico, to replace losses occasioned by reason of storms during the winter of 1931 and 1932: Provided, That expenditures hereunder shall be reimbursed to the United States from future accruals to Jicarilla tribal funds: Provided further, That purchase of sheep under this authorization may be made without compliance with the requirements of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, since this has not been published, for the information of Members I will state that this appropriation is made for the purpose of purchasing sheep to replace certain losses belonging to the Jicarilla Indians in New Mexico. The statement in the Budget is to the effect that last winter this Indian Reservation, as well as other reservations in Arizona and New Mexico, was visited by a series of blizzards, accompanied by heavy falls of snow, and more than 70 per cent of the sheep possessed by these particular Indians were lost. The sheep industry is the principal means of self-support among these Indians. This appropriation is made in order to replace those losses and will, of course, be reimbursed to the United States out of the Indian fund.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 30: On page 27, after line 17, insert:

"Palo Verde Valley, Calif., flood protection: For the protection of the Palo Verde Valley, Calif., from overflow and destruction by Colorado River floods, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of repairing and reconstructing the levee system on the Colorado River in front of the said Palo Verde Valley, fiscal year 1933, $70,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment, which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BYRNS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in such amendment insert the sum "$50,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield me some time.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Wisconsin 10 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the proposal is not a deficiency appropriation. It seeks to provide, as amended, $50,000 for irrigation work to the Palo Verde Valley in California because of threatened floods. Those floods have taken place. The local irrigation district has provided for the emergency, and now we are to provide $50,000 to reimburse the private irrigation district, upon whom the burden of dyking the walls along the Colorado River should fall. The argument in favor of this proposal is that some years back they built a dam on the Colorado River that has caused the accumulation of a lot of sediment. It is agreed that with the completion of the Boulder Dam there will be no threatened overflow that will in any wise invade this irrigation district.

This is merely a proposal to lift the burden of protecting the irrigation district from the local irrigation district and imposing it upon Uncle Sam; no more, no less. If this proposal had been made two months ago, there might have been some ground for it, but even then there was no basis for it. The only basis for it is the threatened floods. Any person who is acquainted with conditions there knows that the peak of the flood takes place around the fore part of June. That has passed. The danger is no more. The damage from a break in the dikes at 10 places has been repaired. The damage has been repaired by the local irrigation district.

This is nothing more than to relieve the local irrigation district of that expense and to transfer it to Uncle Sam. It is another instance of go-getting Johnson, of California, trying to impose something on the United States Government. It is another instance of the gold-diggers of California trying to get something for a local improvement out of the Treasury. It should be rejected because there is no need for it now. It was originally proposed that it should be $70,000. Even the proponents now confess the weakness of their case and propose to make it $50,000. I ask that the entire amendment be rejected.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. SWING].

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, there has been some misstatement of facts, unintentionally, of course, by the gentleman who has just preceded me. This is not an irrigation-district question at all. It is a flood problem, and it is simply a question of whether the United States Government, in good morals, ought to take care of a situation which it itself has created. Laguna Dam was built by the Government for the Yuma reclamation project in Arizona. That dam raised the river a maximum height of 20 feet. The Colorado River began immediately thereafter to reestablish for itself a new gradient, or slope, upstream, which would be sufficient to enable it to perform the functions of nature, that of carrying its water and its silt down to the sea.

That resulted in raising in front of this Palo Verde Valley the bed of the Colorado River between 6 and 7 feet. The facts I am stating are vouched for by the Government engineers who went out and made a study and report under a resolution adopted by Congress last session directing the Secretary of the Interior to make the study and determine what the obligation of the United States Government was. Their estimate was that the United States Government ought to expend $70,000 to raise the levee in front of this valley 3 feet, because it is the obligation of the Government to right the wrong it had done in directing this flood menace upon this valley. To save themselves the people of the valley have spent every dollar they could get up to $2,000,000, and to-day they are bankrupt and unable to do anything more to take care of themselves.

The first flash of 90,000 feet of water to come down this year broke their levee in two places and inundated 10,000 acres, which they were finally able to wall off at the lower part of the valley.

The Weather Bureau predicts that a much greater run-off will come within the near future, and it is to save the valley against complete destruction that the Budget, after consultation with the President of the United States, sent up to the Senate this item in order that the United States Government might do the thing it ought in good conscience to do, remedy the injury that is already done these people.

This is not a continuing appropriation. It is merely to take care of the situation during this year. Government engineers say this will take care of it up until the time Boulder Dam is completed, which will control the river and regulate its size and prevent floods thereafter.

It would be an iniquitous and an immoral thing for the Government, having created this dangerous situation, having directed this menace upon this little community, to then turn its back upon them and refuse to do anything to right the wrong it has already done. I hope the amendment is adopted. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 34: Page 32, after line 3, insert:

"BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS

"The contract by the United States of America represented by the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, acting under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, and M. H. Golden, an individual of the city of San Diego, Calif., for improvement of a motion-picture exchange, involving the erection of a building at the naval operating base, San Diego, Calif., dated January 6, 1932, is hereby legalized from the date of its execution for the purpose of authorizing payments thereunder from the appropriation, 'Contingent, Bureau of Yards and Docks, 1932,' notwithstanding section 12, title 41, United States Code."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BYRNS moves that the House recede from its disagreement from the amendment of the Senate No. 34 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In the matter inserted by such amendment strike out the following: "Section 12, title 41, United States Code," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Section 3733 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 12)."

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry on another matter in the bill not pertaining to this subject?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I am greatly interested, as the gentleman knows, in the question of direct relief.

I understand the Senate had inserted in the bill an item for the President's Emergency Unemployment Committee, or whatever the name of the organization may be. If we are going to appropriate $100,000,000 for direct-relief distribution by the President, it occurred to me the machinery that was built up by this committee and their contacts in the various communities would be very useful at this time. I inquired about it and they stated they are prepared to do just that kind of work, that their work has been fact finding, coordinating, and advisory. Unless some money is appropriated they will go out of existence, will they not?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; they will go out of existence; but if the money is appropriated for the purpose indicated by the gentleman, the President will be in a position, if he wishes, to employ this organization.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. If he needs it.

Mr. BYRNS. If he needs it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Out of this appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS. Out of the appropriation which would be placed in his hands.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Is the gentleman sure there is no question as to that, that he could do so?

Mr. BYRNS. That is my understanding if the money is voted. I do not know what the conference committee will report.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Something will be done eventually.

Mr. BYRNS. I understand the proposition is to place a certain amount of money in the President's hands without any limitation. That would enable him to employ this organization.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just a word in explanation of this amendment. A Mr. Gobel, of San Diego, was given a contract for the erection of a building under the mistaken apprehension of the Bureau of Yards and Docks that payment could be taken out of maintenance. The comptroller later held it was not payable out of that particular appropriation. About $8,000 is due the man who has done the work, and this provision is simply to legalize the action and permit the money to be paid out of the appropriation from which it was originally intended to be taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 37: On page 34, after line 23, insert:

"International Monetary Conference: For the expenses of participation by the United States in an international monetary conference, including silver, to be held during the year 1932, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including transportation and subsistence or per diem in lieu thereof (notwithstanding the provisions of the subsistence expense act of 1926, amendments thereof, or regulations prescribed pursuant thereto); personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, without reference to the classification act of 1923, as amended; stenographic and other services by contract, if deemed necessary, without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes; rent of offices and rooms; purchase of necessary books and documents; printing and binding; official cards, entertainment; hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, fiscal year 1932, to remain available until June 30, 1933, $40,000."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is this an appropriation in pursuance of the resolution which recently passed the House?

Mr. BYRNS. I do not think any resolution has been passed.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is this an independent conference?

Mr. BYRNS. This is an independent conference.

Mr. BRIGGS. Previously authorized?

Mr. BYRNS. No; I do not think it has been authorized. I will say to the gentleman I am not very partial to this conference; in fact, I am not very partial to any of these international conferences, because they do not accomplish very much as a rule.

However, the Senators were very much interested in this and we agreed to bring it back. The President must call this conference, and there is some question as to whether or not it will ever be held, because, of course, the President will not call it unless it is indicated by those governments that will be interested that they will accept his invitation and attend. I think there is a very serious question as to whether this conference will ever be held.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the gentleman think as much as $40,000 is going to be necessary or would half that amount be sufficient?

Mr. BYRNS. It is to be held in London, probably; and if that is so, no doubt this sum would be necessary. It is a very modest sum compared to some appropriations that have been made.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. It is my understanding, notwithstanding the statement just made by the gentleman from Tennessee, that this money is to be available not merely for a conference that may be called by the President but for use in connection with a conference that has either been called or intimated by Great Britain will be called. My understanding is that the thing in controversy here was whether or not the appropriation should be limited to a monetary conference where the subject of silver should be discussed or whether the money should be made available for a conference to discuss economic conditions generally. It is my further understanding that as you have now modified this provision it is limited to a monetary conference that must discuss the subject of silver and that it is not dependent upon a call by the President of the United States.

Mr. BYRNS. That modification was made by the Senate. The gentleman may be correct in his statement. My information was that this conference has not yet been called, and the statement was made that there was a strong possibility it might not be called for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. It seems rather strange that we are appropriating money for something up in the air.

Mr. BYRNS. We have been doing that for a long time.

Mr. STAFFORD. There has been no international monetary conference proposed. We passed through the House, upon the report of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, an act suggesting that the President call an international conference to deal with industrial and monetary problems. This authorization will not be available for that purpose. Neither will it be available for the purpose which has more or less been agreed to by the administration, of having our Government become a member of the conference called by Great Britain. This is merely a make-believe, and of no consequence at all. It neither does one thing nor the other. I would like to have the gentleman strike out the word "monetary," so that the administration may have funds whereby it may attend the British conference that was called to consider industrial matters as well as monetary matters. This will not cover it. This is meaningless.

I had hoped the gentleman would propose an amendment to strike out the word "monetary" so as to make the money available for that conference, with which the President has sympathy, called by the British Government, an international industrial conference, which could consider monetary matters as well. Up to the present time no proposal has been made by any government of the world to have an international monetary conference. This is just meaningless. I had hoped the gentleman would strike out the word "monetary" so as to make the money available for the purpose of sending representatives to the conference called by Great Britain. This is nothing but a sham, a camouflage with a silver lining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to recede and concur. The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 42: Page 41, after line 5, insert:

"Authority is hereby granted the Secretary of War to sell or otherwise dispose of, in accordance with law and regulations, the U. S. Army transport Merritt."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BYRNS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 42 and concur in the same.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I will say for the benefit of the House that this old ship or transport is over in the Philippine Islands. It has been laid up since 1924, and is costing about $200 a month. It is proposed to sell it and stop this expense and get whatever money it will bring.

The motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on to-morrow it shall be in order to consider business on the Consent Calendar, commencing where the last call left off, subject, of course, to privileged business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether we will be ready to file it or not; but, as a matter of precaution, I ask unanimous consent that if we can agree upon a report on the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill that the House conferees may have until 12 o'clock to-night to file such report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman wish to incorporate in his request the same privilege for the conferees on the War Department appropriation bill, if, perchance, they agree on a report?

Mr. BYRNS. I am not in charge of that bill, and I can not make any request about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The Secretary of the Treasury, in performing the duties imposed upon him by this paragraph, shall administer the same in such a manner that the transfer of duties provided hereby will not result in the establishment of any new positions in the Customs Service."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The Senate has modified this section by requiring that in giving effect to it, special consideration be given to the domestically manufactured article where the raw material of which the article is made is grown in the United States; and the House has accepted the Senate amendment.

On Nos. 51 and 52: Corrects section numbers.

Managers on the part of the House.

ACTION ON PROHIBITION

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I shall only occupy a short period of your time. I want to take this opportunity, as Congress will be adjourning shortly sine die, to express my appreciation of the courteous treatment that I have received since I have been in Congress from the Democratic Members. I came here with some misgivings as to what might happen. I want to say that I am more than pleased.

But I want to call the attention of the majority Members to one or two things. During this session of Congress they have had control, and we have had several gestures here. The first was the so-called tariff bill to take away the power of the President. The next was the Patman bonus bill. That was a puny gesture, for everyone knew that the Government could not pay it at this time.

The next was the so-called Garner "pork barrel" bill. Everyone knows that that bill will never become a law.

Now, I want the Democrats to make good, and the only chance they have, since there has been a failure of most things, is that the Democratic convention at Chicago adopted a repeal plank and they ask for immediate modification of the Volstead Act. I want to say that there are enough Members on the Republican side to join with you Democrats to immediately modify the Volstead Act. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Bishop Cannon would not let your President sign a modification act.

Mr. DE PRIEST. He will sign it, and we will have the same President after the next election. [Applause.]

If you are on the square, you have the committees, you have the House, and you can bring in a bill that will modify the Volstead Act, and we will help you pass it. [Applause.] If we had the House, and our convention had hog-tied us as your convention has hog-tied you, we would proceed immediately. Have you the courage to do it?

[Here the gavel fell.]

APPROPRIATION BILLS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the majority leader about the three appropriation bills that have not yet passed—the Treasury and Post Office, the Agriculture and the War Department bills. Two of them are here on the Speaker's table. The normal, natural procedure would be to take those bills up now and do what we can with them.

Mr. RAINEY. The gentleman does not want them taken up to-night. We can do it to-morrow.

Mr. SNELL. The current appropriations expire at 12 o'clock to-night.

Mr. STAFFORD. There have been instances in the history of Congress where they have gone over two days without any resolution being passed for the interim.

Mr. SNELL. We have two bills on the Speaker's table. Why not act on them?

Mr. RAINEY. Two of those bills are still in conference.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Under our Constitution no department can properly function unless it has authority from Congress and an appropriation, and after 12 o'clock to-night the Department of Justice could not properly function.

Mr. SNELL. And the Secretary of War ought to shut down every improvement on rivers and harbors. I do not know that he would do it.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—THE APPEAL FOR VOTES

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the Democratic Party has had control of this Congress since the 7th day of last December. They have not offered one piece of constructive legislation with any hope of final enactment. All legislation they have offered has been of the type to appeal to the popular sentiment to get votes, and not to try to better the conditions of the American people. They have made a great hue and cry for economy. I agree with them that we should economize.

The Democrats are not the party of construction, but generally the party of destruction. In other words, let me remind you that the emblem of the Democratic Party is the donkey; the emblem of the Republican Party is the elephant. Under the conditions under which this country is now operating there is serious economic depression, and there is need of constructive legislation. This is not a job for a donkey, but a job for an elephant.

With the four years' experience Mr. Hoover has had in the White House, he is the best-prepared man to occupy his seat for the next four years in order to bring this country out of the great dilemma it is now in.

To quote from a speech delivered by one of the greatest living orators in America—I am happy to say a man of my own race—Roscoe Conkling Simmons, delivered in Chicago on June 15, I present the following:

In this city the Republican Party entered upon its matchless career. Here it anointed deathless Lincoln and accepted the infamous challenge of disunion.

Now we are met here again. We have come to reanoint the present chief of our cause and accept the challenge of despair.

The father of our faith, was said by Ingersoll, renowned in the story of gifted speech, to have been as patient as destiny. Time will again write upon the brightest page of fame. She will dip her pen in the dew of truth and beneath the story of the patience of Lincoln, which gave us the new Nation, she will write of the endurance of Herbert Hoover, which offers us the new spirit of inward conquest.

Up from the Revolution came Lincoln. His was the appointed task, and he performed it in the way appointed for the few born not to die.

Forward from the Rebellion came Herbert Hoover to perform for government as Lincoln performed for man. He is the fullest bloom of the intrepid youth of our land.

He examples the possibilities of this new state and answers the expectation of the grandest motherhood in the annals of sacrifice and struggle.

In 1880, at the convention which produced Garfield, Douglass, the forensic genius in black, invented the motto of our cause. He had measured all hopes in the flash of the sword of incomparable Grant. He himself had undergone no small suffering. He had seen the pen of Lincoln make the world over in a night and create the first empire that liberty had ever known.

He had seen your fathers, who had established this Nation above all governments, go away when Lincoln called, thousands never to return, except as they return in me who speaks to you now. He had seen my emancipator fall in death as he lifted me, and those seen with me, from the living, merciless death of fetters.

Led on by memory, urged, too, by gratitude, Douglass cried out to the convention which arose at his words: "The Republican Party is the ship; all else is the sea."

Mr. Chairman, the ship of which Douglass then spoke still sails. All else is still the sea, and now I am permitted to speak of my captain. With eye and heart I examine him. I watch him on the bridge. I note him most when most the storm is wild. Another voyage I remember.

The Captain of the vessel of eternal hope was once begged by his followers to speak to the loosened elements that shook the sea and put out the stars. With countenance fashioned by the mistakeless hand of divinity, He smiled the sea into ripples and the winds into zephyrs.

The inquiry of His astonished voyagers lives in every heart that loves and hopes. They inquired in one voice, "What manner of man is this that wind and sea obey His will?"

Around our captain now rolls the sea of circumstances, high and full and violent. The winds of a disturbed world beat upon his face. But mark him. Unwearied and unmoved he stands as if he were the last long test of manliness in man.

What manner of man is he? Without fear he rides the tempest and accepts the challenge of each mocking wind. Let others, Mr. Chairman, speak of his genius in government. I dwell upon other things. Herbert Hoover is the only hero that the bloodless war of changing opinions has produced in his century. In youth we discover the patriarch.

I speak now because I am a Republican. All I am I owe to the Republican Party. I owe the Republican Party all I hope to be. It found me in rags and clothed me in robes of citizenship. It found me dumb and taught me the language of Shakespeare. It taught me to write my name and stand where you now see me.

Behind us is a record achieved by no other political parliament in history. Above us are names that live in the precious list of the godlike: Lincoln, above the praise of man; Grant, the only soldier who never lost a battle; Garfield and Harrison, too; McKinley, the defender of the faith, and our choice one, who stood among us and reached the highest peak of moral grandeur—the first, the real, the only Roosevelt.

Not long ago I stood before the tomb of Lincoln. I sought a word from him for times that trouble and for the struggle that often almost overcomes me. As I stood there, I was heavy no longer. I saw Lincoln everywhere, in all the brightness of his immortal state. It was evening and the beauty of the twilight fell upon the grandest sarcophagus among the tombs of all the great.

He seemed to speak. He seemed to say: "I died that you might be fleet of foot. Go, go and speak to those who still gather in my name. Say that I dwell in spirit about the stout and burdened heart that now wears the Nation upon it. Say to Hoover, if by chance you see him, that once I traveled the path now trod by him. Say to him that that path was cleared by time only for the few brave enough to walk alone toward these immortal fields where you sought and found me."

Mr. Chairman, in the name of my State, Illinois, home of Lincoln, of Grant, and Logan, in the name of the millions made into men by the Republican Party, in the name of the youth of our country and the honor of the Nation, I second the nomination of Herbert Hoover.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAINEY. We can attend to that to-morrow. I do not think that five minutes will make any difference.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, July 1, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.
